He was the first pupil to enter the old Central School building, then, and for many years known as the "Union School," when it was first opened, and was for years a pupil of the veteran teacher, Nicholas Wilson. He entered upon the study of law under the tuition of Mr. E. Jones Parke, Q.C., and after being called to the bar he practiced law for several years in this city. Subsequently he removed to the Northwest. He enhisted in the volunteer militia at the Trent affair, when trouble with the United States was expected, and eventually rose to the rank of major in the 7th Battalion, with which rank he retired. After his removal to the Northwestern States he was deputy United States collector of customs at St. Vincent, Minn. Owing to ill-health he had to retire from active business, and he returned to this city about two years ago. He had many endearing qualities, and his many old friends in this city will regret to learn of his demise.

Nobody Able to Rid the City of the Military Burden.

Judge Elliot Washes His Hands of the Matter.

Everybody Disclaims the Responsibility for Their Being Called-Company Refused to Send Cars to Springbank.

Mayor Wilson, speaking to an Advertiser reporter this morning of the city's military burden, said he could have taken 25 policemen and cleared the streets of the crowd on Saturday evening, July 8. That was why he wanted an investigation of the police force. He had finally read the riot act under repeated threats of heavy damage suits against the city from the street railway company's solicitor, and had called in the militia upon the advice of County Crown Attorney Magee. Yesterday he had personally requested Col. Holmes to at least discharge the cavalry, which would take off the heaviest part of the expense. So far as he (the mayor) was concerned, his hands were tied in the matter of getting rid of the soldiers. That matter rested with Judge William Elliot, who had signed the order. Judge William Elliot was seen by

The Advertiser this afternoon, and stated that he had replied to City Clerk Kingston's letter, in which the council's desire to have the military removed was set forth. His honor states that he has nothing to do with the dismissal of the troops. "I see by the papers that the Woodstock and other companies have returned home, "Who dismissed them? I was never consulted about the matter, and whoever dismissed them can dismiss the others. It's ridiculous." quisition for the troops. "Mayor Wilson and Crown Attorney Magee came to my house," he said, "and it was represented that the town was in the hands of two mobs-one in East London and the other down town. They were unable to get the order from three magistrates, and there was nothing else for me to do but to sign the requisition."

The reporter asked if there was anything in the requisition relative to the strength of the force called for.
His honor replied that he did not think there was. The paper had been prepared by Mr. Mages, he said, and he had the utmost confidence in Mr.

Magee. the mayor waited on Judge Elliot, and suredly he is the natural and logical represented that in his opinion the mob candidate, and today he is invincible." was too strong for the police. At that time there was no thought of calling in outside forces, which was a matter for future deliberation. Both the mayor and himself, Mr. Magee said, urged the street railway company to run the cars stalled down town on the night of July 8, to Springbank, but the management refused, on the ground that they did not wish to lose the city's protection.

He said he understood Mr. Whitney meant to see Admiral Dewey and persuade the seaman to let his name be presented to the national convention as a candidate for the nomination. THE CZAR AS A BOY

The Czar was taught English, which he speaks without any accent, by a Mr. Heath, a gentleman who was very fond of boxing. An interesting picture is given by a French writer of the early life of the young ruler of the Russians. Nicholas and his brothers were brought up with very little ceremony, though they were well educated, particularly in religious matters. But their Sundays were not passed in a fashion which the old Puritans would have approved of, for on that particular day they entertained at dinner their boy and girl friends, and very lively these banquets were. The manners at the tables of the future Czar and his brothers and friends remind one rather of the days of Peter the Great, and the way in which that monarch "carried on," for we are told that "there was no end to the tricks the host and their small guests played. From end to end of the table there used to be continuous firing of bread pellets which were perpetually striking princely noses or landing in royal mouths."

Some men judge by appearances, but detectives judge by disappearances. There is more than one kind of smokeless powder that is fatal to mankind. The courtship of Romeo and Juliet discloses a spark of Shakespearean genius.

No one need fear cholera or any summer complaint if they have a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial ready for use. It corrects all looseness of the bowels promptly, and causes a healthy and natural action. This is a medicine adapted for the young and old, rich and poor, and is rapidly becoming the most popular medicine for cholera, aysentery, etc.
