West London had a reminder of 1883 last night, but fortunately none of the horrors of the great flood were realized. swollen torrent that leaped over its na- rent. A dam awa just broken," said

PATCHING THE BREAKWATER. The city engineer and street commissioner were on the scene, and soon had a gang of men at work inspecting the breakwater, and patching the weak spots. Teams were secured, and sand by the cartload brought to the riverside, put into bags, and deposited behind the wooden front of the dike to cliffe road and Mount Pleasant avenue buttress it against the force of the to make boating an easy matter but water. Hundreds of bags were so for the drifting sidewalks and varying utilized, a great many being dumped and rapid currents. On Maple street a pposite the baseball grounds. nd eventually it gave way.

PLENTY OF WARNING. he gradual rise gave the villagers nty of warning. The very element danger seemed to have a great attion for the multitude, and thousaids walked the streets of the suburb evel after the water started to encroach on it. The curiosity of the crowd was kept on the alert by the continued disappearance of the dike, and a crisis came about 3 p.m., when the water reached the breakwater level at its lowest point. This was near Ash street in the southwestern corner of the vilage. Steadily it crept in, and spread itself with the utmost impartiality)ver the surrounding streets and yards, triving the people before it like a flock of sheep though a good many househoders held the fort and prepared for the siege by ripping up carpets and other valuables on the ground floor. The majority, however, retreated to higher territory. Rowboats were pressed into service, and many who were impisoned were rescued. Detective Riderand P. C. Monaghan directed operations and did a great deal of hard work. Volunteers were not wanting. Ever person around Ash, Maple and Walnu streets, who desired to leave home was taken out, including whole families. Mayor Wison and several aldermen drove around in the afternoon warning the residents on the Wharncliffe road, Center, Dundas and adjacent streets, vacate ther homes, but very few paid attention as the collapse of the breakwater was not foreseen, and the breakwater wis not foreseen, and the rise in the lower part of the village was so gradual that it did not seriously threaten them. But the overflow, after immersing the ower portions, reached the Wharncliff road and Center streets, and began to swamp these main thorougheres. Luckily as it main thorough tres. Luckily, as it was back water the current was not strong. This anger came later.

THE BREAKAGE COMES. The afternoon cragged on, with the water slowly taking possession of the western portion. The second sensational incident came at 7:15, when about 25 feet of the brealwater opposite Tecumseh Park suddeily gave way. The big baseball fence bhind it was snapped off like a pipe-stan, and the water, released from the restraint of the dike, poured into the apertue with incredible weaker; western creamery, 15c to 20c; a lake, and Dundas steet a canal. Rowboats traversed thestreets, and rnin' bobbed up north side of the street, the water could be seen coming in through the breakwater near the south fence of the baseball grounds, like a swollen stream running over a dam. In about twenty minutes Tecumseh Park was a broad expanse of turbulent water, flecked with bits of boards that went swirling around in seething eddies.

Policemen patrolled the streets that were passable, notifying the residents that the breakwater had broken, and advising those who were in danger to leave their homes. Some followed their advice, and betook themselves to the hotels in the city or to residences of friends, but many who seemed in danger showed great reluctance to leave their homes. Center street was flooded quickly, and also Dundas, between Center and the Wharncliffe road. The houses there were soon surrounded with water. Women in them became nervously excited, and shouted for help, which was not long in coming. Several cabs were kept in constant use to assist people from the houses which seemed in danger, and as the horses splashed through the flooded streets the water in many places came over the axles. Boats were procured from Lancaster's boat house with all possible haste, and rescue work undertaken by many willing hands.

SPECTATORS TRAPPED. The whole population of the city of the streets but instead of the streets but instead of the work are at work doing what they can to wards strengthening things up, and as the work are at work doing what they can to wards strengthening things up, and as the work are subsided suffiseemed to gather at the river yester- flooding of the streets, but instead of day. They could hardly identify heard on every hand. Stories which the placed Thames in the fierce and pointed to a great disaster were curswollen torrent that leaped over its natural boundaries, and was swallowing more that it was raining hard at St. the coves, portions of the Rispin and Stead farms, and a large stretch of the street railway tracks. But in many cases this was not possible, and floating buckets and barrels could be seen coursing down the highways. They probably found their way to the river.

DIFFICULT NAVIGATION. From shortly after 8 o'clock last evening until daybreak there was plenty of water along Center, Maple, near the foot of Dundas street bridge, rig owned by a firm who manufacture posite the baseball grounds. This boked to be a particularly bad place, and the water came within a foot of the top of the box. At Mr. Patrick's the top of the box. At Mr. Patrick's residence not far distant the water was several inches deep through the whole house. Fences were submerged and the whole flats at the foot of Mount Pleasant hill from a block or two north of Mount Pleasant avenue to the river south was covered with water. The houses were all isolated. Rowers plied their boats about in back yards, dodging clothes lines and skimming over fences. As the boats neared many of the houses the rescuers were gladly hailed. Some difficulty was experienced in some cases in assisting the people from their houses into the boats. In one case three women had to be helped out of the house by means of a window at the side. On Becher street, a resident living near the breakwater had a boat tied ti his veranda post, so that if the water, which was then within a few inches of the floor, came much higher, he and his wife and family could leave it. THE WATER RECEDES.

At 3 o'clock this morning the water egan to recede, and in a few minutes fell nine inches. From that time it lowered slowly, and at 6 o'clock the water had almost disappeared from Dundas street. At 8 o'clock groups of citizens began to flock toward West London and from that hour thousands affely. have visited the flooded district. AFTER THE FLOOD., Along Cherry street the boys and young men seemed to enjoy themselves in about three feet of water. They made rafts of the more substantial sidewalks, and conveyed the women from some of the lower houses up to the Wharncliffe, where they waded in mud, ankle-deep, for some distance. While some were going out, others, who had left their homes yesterday, were returning to ascertain the extent of he damage. In many houses cupboards, sideboards and bureaus were placed on chairs to keep them above the water. Machines, etc., were placed on the tops of wood piles, and in other places the bedding had been rolled in bundles and put as near the ceiling as possible. On the floors of most of the houses on the south end of Center street, Wharncliffe road, Beech street, Ash street, Walnut street and many other streets, was about half an inch of yellow mud. This the residents began to sweep off. DAMAGE ESTIMATED AT $1,000.

The loss to residents of West London will be heavy, and goods in all the cellars of the low-lying district have been ruined, together with much furniture. An old lady on the Wharncliffe road, whose house had been water-logged, stood by the roadside as the car passed this morning, and hailed it. with two other women, stood on a mound surrounded by the rushing water, and when the car had stopped, she said in a pleading tone of voice "Won't you take us up town, and trust us for the money? An Advertiser reporter, while rowing long the Wharncliffe road, was told by Mr. R. A. Jones, who has been living in West London for the past 27 years, that this was by far the worst flood, excepting the great one in July, that he could remember. The city intended strengthening the breakwater this spring, but work had not yet begun. Much of it will have to be rebuilt. Peters' Flats, in the north, were submerged. The water was the highest since the great waterspout of July, 1883.

Ottawa, March 14.—The Ottawa recount is half over. The result up to the present time is that Mr. Powell's majority of 13 has been wiped out, and Mr. O'Keefe, the Liberal, now leads by 5 votes. As he has gained right along there seems to be little doubt that he will be declared elected at the conclusion of the recount. The explana-tion given of the change in Mr. O'Keefe's favor is that a large proportion of the deputy returning officers were Conservative, and where doubt as to the validity of the ballot existed gave Mr. Powell the benefit of the doubt. Mr. Powell's declared majority was two, but seven subdivisions were left out in which he had 11 more, because the deputies forgot to make proper entry.
