FAMOUS GEMS OF PROSE

THE MAYFLOWER By Edward Everett

TETHINKS I see it now, that one solitary, adventurous vessel, the Mayflower, of a forlorn hope, freighted with the prospects of a future state, and bound across the unknown sea. I behold it pursuing with a thousand misgivings, the uncertain, the tedious voyage. Suns rise and set, and weeks and months pass, and winter surprises them on the deep, but brings them not the sight of the wished-for shore. I see them now, scantily supplied with provisions, crowded almost to suffocation in their ill-stored prison, delayed by calms, pursuing a circuitous route; and now, driven in fury before the raging tempest, in their scarcely seaworthy vessel. The awful voice of the storm howls through the rigging. The laboring masts seem straining from their base; the dismal sound of the pumps is heard; the ship leaps, as it were, madly from billow to billow; the ocean breaks and settles with ingulfing floods over the floating deck, and beats with deadening weight against the staggering vessel.

I see them escaped from these perils, pursuing their all but desperate undertaking, and landed at last, after a five months' passage, on the ice-clad rocks of Plymouth, weak and exhausted from the voyage, poorly armed, scantily provisioned, depending on the charity of their shipmaster for a draught of beer on board, drinking nothing but water on shore, without shelter, without means, sur-

Shut now the volume of history, and tell me, on any principle of human probability, what shall be the fate of this handful of adventurers? Tell me, man of military science, in how many months they were all swept off by the thirsty savage tribes enumerated within the boundaries of New England? Tell me, politician, how long did this shadow of a colony, on which your conventions and treaties had not smiled, languish on the distant coast? Student of history, compare for me the baffled projects, the deserted settlements, the abandoned adventurers of other times, and find the parallel of this. Was it the winter storm, beating upon the houseless heads of women and children? Was it hard labor and spare meals? Was it disease? Was it the tomahawk? Was it the deep malady of a blighted hope, a ruined enterprise, and a broken heart, aching in its last moments at the recollections of the loved and left, beyond the sea? Was it some or all of them united that hurried this forsaken company to their melancholy fate? And is it possible that neither of these causes, that all combined, were able to blast this bud of hope? Is is possible that from a beginning so feeble, so frail, so worthy, not so much of admiration as of pity, there has gone forth a progress so steady, a growth so wonderful, a reality so important, a promise yet to be fulfilled, so glorious?

STANLEY IN AFRICA

(Boston Globe)

The life of Henry Stanley was one of singular romance and incident. As a child he was the inmate of a poorhouse and his name was John Rowlands. The following of a seafaring life seemed to offer him a chance for a career, and when he was lifteen he shipped for a voyage. At New Orleans he fell in with the gentleman whose name he took in token of affectionate gratitude for the generous kindness shown him.

After service in the Confederate army and United States navy, he was sent as correspondent by the New York Herald with the British army in the Abys sinian campaign of 1867.

It was in 1874, with his expenses paid equally by the London Daily Telegraph and the New York Herald that he went to Africa to find Dr. Ligingstone, whom he had previously met at Ujuji. Finding that Livingstone was dead, he made one of the most remarkable journeys of discovery in all history, and it was four years before he returned to England.

The story of his struggle to get his command in safety through Africa and the hostile people occasioned much comment and criticism in England. But when he (Boston Globe)

The king had been converted to a be- stand mo lief in Mahomet and devoutly followed the good and teaching of the Koran. Through Stanley's advice the missionaries sought him out in Africa and he embraced the Christian gular use year in a faith with all the benefits this brings to first person to greet him was the Prince of Wales—the late Edward VII.

Stanley predicted for certain sections of Africa the same splendid future of civilization that later explorers all look forward to. He saw in the triumphant march of Christianity a land of peace and plenty with broad culture and all the benefits of scientific knowledge.

In the middle of Africa Stanley had a pleasant experience in visiting one of the native rulers. The traveller was received with honors and various public functions were given to celebrate the occasion. One of these was a naval review in which there were eighty-four canoes manned by 2,500 men. The king and his 300 wives were present to enjoy the various manoeuvres, in which the racing of the canoes was one of the notable features.

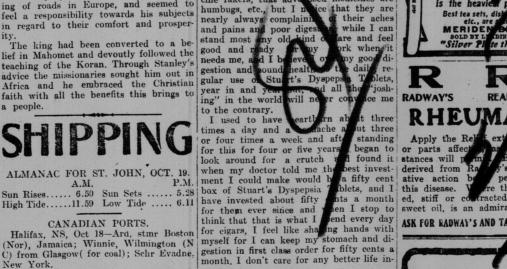

Stanley found that this King Mtesa was interested in hearing of other countries and people. He asked about the building of roads in Europe, and seemed to feel a responsibility towards his subjects in regard to their comfort and prosperity.

AN ABSOLUTE NECESSITY

So Thinks at Lest One Traveling Man

I would as soon think of starting out without my mileage books and grip as to start out on a trip without a box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets in my valise, said a traveling man who represents a St. Louis hardware house. Why? Because I have to put up at all kinds of hotels and boarding houses. I have to eat good, bad and indifferent food at all hours of the day and night and I don't believe any man's stomach will stand that sort of thing without protest, anyway I know mine won't. It has to have something to break the fall and Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the crutch I fall back on.

My friends often "josh" me about it, tell me I'm an easy mark for patent medicine fakers, that adverse and easy while I can early all ways complaining their aches and pains and poor digest while I can early all wild being are and feel.

RHEUMATISM AND COMMON SENSE

Father Morriscy's No. 7 Eliminates the Uric Acid.

Many treatments will relieve the aches and pains of rheumatism, but there is only one way to cure that dread disease. The common sense method is to remove the cause, and the effects will soon disappear.

Rheumatism is caused, as is well known, by the failure of the kidneys to perform their intended work of filtering the uric acid out of the blood and eliminating it from the body through the bladder. When the kidneys go on strike, the uric acid is carried to the joints and tissues, where it causes stiffening

If you are not yourself rheumatic, you doubtless know of some one who is, and who would be glad to learn of a treatment which has such a consistent record of cures. It is easy to take and sure to benefit and ultimately cure rheumatism, 50c. a box, at your dealer's, or from Father Morriscy Medicine Co., Ltd., Chatham, N.B.
