

The solution of the problem of producing helium in large quantities was, before the beginning of the war, one which would have been considered by many visionary and chimerical, but through the enthusiastic support and financial aid received from the British Admiralty and from the Bureau of Mines and the Naval and Air Boards of the United States, the possibility of the production on a large scale has been realised.

May 1st, 1919.