TO FINISH PAVEMENT

"We intend to finish the Wellington street pavement before we leave town if we have to stay here until January," said Jack Hanna of the Dominion Paving Co. to a Planet reporter this afternoon. "The delays have been many this fall, but we expect to be finished before long now. The concrete on the little section between Cross and Wellington streets will be put down to-morrow. The cement filler will be finished to-morrow. Bricks are being laid to-day from the west end of the street."

Will N. Harben's new story, Abner Daniel, will be commenced in to-morrow's Planet. No one should fail to read this splendid serial, which is very interesting throughout.

BOATS AGROUND

The vessels "Syrnarian" and "Naiad," laden with lumber for the S. Hadley Company, are aground near the mouth of the river. They tried to make the mouth of the river by the old north or American channel and came to grief. The Lilly Smith, which arrived in port yesterday afternoon, as soon as her cargo is shifted, will go down and pull the unfortunate boats off the banks of the channel.

Captain Williscraft, of the Lilly Smith, reports a stormy trip down this time, the boat losing part of her deck load.

One of the best serial stories ever published will commence in The Big Saturday Planet this week. It will be well worth reading.

VETERANS' CLAIMS

J. R. Graham, of this city, has returned from New Liskard, New Ontario, where he has been locating Volunteer claims for Chief Holmes, T. Richardson, S. Smith and H. Murray. He brought back with him a sketch of the country, showing where he has located the claims. He says the country around New Liskard abounds with deer and Chief Holmes is already considering what he will do with the deer on his place.

Mr. Graham reports that the wet weather has delayed the survey very much and they will not be through this fall. The weather there is much the same as it is here, except that the nights are a little colder than in Chatham.

Mr. Graham went to New Ontario last May and has since been running a saw mill there. He has no trouble in disposing of his lumber, as new settlers are constantly coming in. He has cut 500,000 feet already this fall. He will return shortly.

All reading notices of local announcements must be received at this office not later than noon of the day on which it is desired that they appear.

WITH AUDITOR

The agreement between the city and county in regard to the amount each shall pay for the administration of justice, the maintenance of Harrison Hall and other matters, expires this year. Warden Robinson, County Commissioner Grant, Sifton and Ilsgart and County Treasurer Fleming, representing the county, and Mayor McCool, and Ald. Marshall and McCong and Scullard and City Clerk Merritt, representing the city, met in Harrison Hall yesterday to discuss a renewal of the agreement.

After considering the last agreement and making a cursory examination of the actual expenses each had been paying, the committee decided to leave the matter of the adjustment of the portion each should pay to Mayor McCool and Warden Robinson, they to have power to employ an expert accountant. The committee thought that in this way the expenses of an arbitration would be saved.

The Warden and Mayor met this morning and decided to secure the services of Official Auditor F. H. Macpherson. He will examine the accounts paid out during the past number of years and adjust the amount the city and county should each pay, upon a fair and equitable basis.

Mr. Macpherson has adjusted the same matter for several other counties, and his schedules have always been accepted.

E. L. CONVENTION

The names of delegates from all over the London conference are being received for the Epworth League convention, which will meet in the Victoria Avenue Methodist Church next Tuesday and Wednesday. The program is unique throughout and will be full of interest. The sessions will be open to all.

SCIENTIFIC TREAT

Chathamites seldom have the opportunity of enjoying such an interesting scientific exhibition as will be presented at the Grand this evening, when many of the mysteries and intricacies of liquid air and wireless telegraphy will be exemplified. These are two of the latest and most important discoveries in the scientific world and the experiments to-night will be fascinating and educational. An educator recently said of this exhibition, "It is magic, but the magic of truth, and is worth a month's education to any high school pupil."

Abner Daniel, the splendid new serial story, will be commenced in to-morrow's big Saturday Planet. Don't fail to read the opening chapters. No one should miss it.

FOUND HIS SON

Danny Gagner, hotel keeper at Pain Court, has located his son Danny Gagner, Jr. The boy is only 15 years old. He left Chatham on a visit to Detroit with some other lads from Pain Court. He mysteriously disappeared from the hotel where he was stopping and Mr. Gagner has been looking for the boy ever since. He finally located him at Valparaiso, Ind., and Mr. Gagner left on the noon train to-day to bring his son home. The lad's whereabouts were found out through a letter he wrote to a girl friend at Pain Court.

LOST LAUNCH

Theodore Nelson spent yesterday at his club house, Bayview, along the lake shore near Mitchell's Bay. He went out with the intention of shooting ducks, but there were no ducks to be shot at. It was very cold work and he and Eli Charron, who was with him, were nearly perished with the cold before they decided to give up. Flocks of black and grey ducks could be seen heading southward. The marsh and plains are covered with ice and the lake is also covered for a mile out.

Mr. Nelson reports that Wednesday morning a large, 26 foot naptha launch came drifting into shore about a mile and a half out from his club house. It stuck on a bar, but yesterday morning it drifted in close to the shore.

Mr. Nelson and Mr. Charron walked out on the ice to where the launch was, and Mr. Charron is to-day trying to get the launch off the shallow bar where it has drifted. It is a handsome launch called the "Rattie" and it is thought that during a heavy blow it broke away from one of the docks on the St. Clair flats and drifted over to the bay. The rope at the bow was snapped, and this supports this argument, it seems strange, however, that the launch has not been searched for by the owners, who must have missed it.

A man's cap and a few pieces of bread and butter were found in the bottom of the craft, but it is not thought that anyone was lost, as there is no water in the launch and it was found right side up. The boat would cost about $300. Mr. Nelson captured the cushions and is saving them for the owner until he comes after his launch. Meanwhile Theodore has the use of the cushions in his club house.

Under the Ice.

Captain Joseph La Barge, one of the early pilots of the Missouri River, was noted for his courage and daring. In the winter of 1834 he experienced the following adventure, which is recorded in the "History of Steamboat Navigation on the Missouri River," by Mr. H. M. Chittenden. He had occasion to cross the river, which was frozen deep. There was a path across, which ran between two large air-holes through the ice. The weather was extremely cold, and a blizzard had already begun.

Captain La Barge wrapped himself in a blanket coat, held tight to his body by a belt, and was armed with a rifle tomahawk and knife. He felt confident of crossing all right, for the distance was short, and he knew the way so well that he felt as if he could follow it blindfolded. In fact, that was practically his situation, for the wind drove the snow into his face so violently that it was impossible to look ahead. Getting his bearings as well as he could, he started on a slow run in face of the blinding storm.

It was in any case a reckless performance, considering the existence of the air-holes near the path, but La Barge was not given to fearing future dangers, and forged boldly ahead. For once his confidence deceived him. All of a sudden he plunged headlong into the river. He instantly realized that he was in one of the air-holes, and which one? It was the lower one he was certainly lost, for the swift current had borne him under the ice before he came to the surface. If it was the upper hole, he might float to the lower.

He soon rose to the surface and bumped the overlying ice. Sinking and rising again, he bumped the ice a second time. The limit of endurance was almost reached, when suddenly his head emerged, and he opened his eyes. Spreading his hands, he caught the edge of the ice. He held on until he could draw his knife, which he plunged into the ice far enough to give him something to pull against, and after much severe and perilous straining, he had pulled himself out. He held on until he could draw his knife, which he plunged into the ice far enough to give him something to pull against, and after much severe and perilous straining, he had pulled himself out.

But now a new peril awaited him. The storm was at its height, the cold intense, and his clothing was drenched through. The bath which he had received had not chilled him much, for the water was warmer than the air outside, and his exertions would have kept him warm anyway, but out in the open air, where he would freeze if he did not quickly reach a fire. Hastily recovering his bearings, he set out anew, and had the good fortune to reach the post with out further trouble.

A Water Contest.

A story in which a pointer's loyalty persistence and foolhardiness are mixed in about equal proportions is quoted below from the New York "Sun." Pointers are not naturally good water dogs but some of the breed, as sportsmen know, come near perfection, and such an exception is a dog owned by a Texan named Burleson.

One night Mr. Burleson shot a wild goose which was flying over to its night retreat in a salt bay. The bird was wing-tipped, came down on a long slant and fell into a tank a quarter of a mile out. The dog got the notice.

The next morning Mr. Burleson was walking over the prairie with the dog and found the bird quietly swimming in a pond not more than a quarter of an acre in extent, but deep. It was in perfect condition, except for its slight wound, a large gander, and very powerful.

The dog recognized instantly that it was a wounded bird, and plunged in without a word of command. For a little while the gander kept out of the way, but it was finally penned in a corner. Then it dived, went under the dog and came up five yards away. The dog resumed the chase, and the unequal contest was kept up for a quarter of an hour. The dog dived time after time, but of course could not catch its active adversary. Soon it was swimming with its nostrils barely out of water, and once or twice they went under. It was dead to all commands. Its final drowning was only a matter of minutes.

Mr. Burleson had no gun. As a last recourse he gathered a little pile of stones from the edge of the pond and began hurling them at the gander. Finally, by chance, he struck it on the back near the base of the neck and stunned it for a moment. At that moment the dog closed and grasped it.

The dog was so tired that it could do nothing with the bird, but its hold kept its head out of water while the gander thrashed it with its wings. The battling pair, the distressful snortings of the dog mingled with the hoarse calls of the gander, fought their way to within ten feet of the bank, and Mr. Burleson jumped in. The water came to his armpits when he reached them, but he grabbed the gander, took the dog in one hand and the bird in the other, and brought them ashore. The pointer was too exhausted to stand, but fell on the pebbly shore and lay there panting.

In Earnest Then.

"I have noticed," said the off-hand philosopher, "that a woman will get a golf dress when she has no intention to play golf." "That's so," agreed the man with the incandescent whiskers. "And," continued the off-hand philosopher, "she will get a riding habit when she has no thought of going into the water, and a riding habit when the very thought of climbing on a horse gives her the chills, and—" interrupted the man with the incandescent whiskers; "but when she gets a wedding dress she means business. Ever notice that?"—"Judge."

Logical.

An Irishman entered a country inn and called for a glass of the best Irish whiskey. After being supplied he drank it, and was about to walk out when the following conversation took place: Landlord—Here, sir, you haven't paid for that whiskey you ordered. Irishman—What's that you say? Landlord—I said you haven't paid for that whiskey you ordered. Irishman—Did you pay for it? Landlord—Of course I did. Irishman—Well, then, what's the good of both of us paying for it?—"Fit-Bla."

A POPULAR HEALTH RESORT.

A Grand Trunk official stated to-day that the mineral waters of St. Catharines, Ontario, are becoming renowned throughout the country, as is demonstrated by the large influx of people to that city during the past year. The water is like that of the great Kreutznach springs of Prussia, and is claimed, if anything, to be even more effective in cases in which it is used. The business at the resort at St. Catharines has increased about 100 per cent. over last year.
