

ASSOCIATION.
To night, from the road in the valley, a strain of an old waltz floated out through the lips of some light-hearted boy. That measure recalled a fair evening in sunny Sonora. A graceful young girl with the sweetest low voice, and eyes that were black, as the night, yet as soft as a fawn's, played those bars on her sweet-toned guitar—a mellow old instrument, with rose colored ribbon attached. The fair Spanish girl and her sister, how sweetly they sang, in their own liquid language of song; the perfume of roses, the night wind that fluttered the curtains, the moon-beams that fell on the floor—the picture comes back in the rush of an instant. "But none of all this beauty which floods the earth and air" comes back with just the tender light that falls on one young face—a face that, though a thousand miles away, returns with all its girlish lines, and smiles upon me through the misty distance, even as it smiled that night.

Once, when the dark cloud of suspense rose between heart and hope, the sweet voice of a woman sang sadly of joys long gone by; the melody, solemn and slow, rose and fell like the tolling of funeral bells and though

"I know many songs have been made since then,
And there's many a voice as clear, I ne'er can list that song again, Without a starting tear."

To some the sweet odor of roses recalls a white wreath on the black lid of a coffin—"a coffin hid under the daisies." The sound of the ocean's moaning, when the moon sails high over billowy clouds and the walls of the shipwrecked come back from the fair, cruel waters; the rain-drops tapping lightly on the window-pane, a ringlet of soft hair, a golden circle from some finger fair, a knot of faded ribbon, the most useless trinket, the veriest trifle, and, like a flash, some day, some hour, some anguish or some joy, comes back from Time's receding army of events. Strange how these little ghosts rise up in sudden, unexpected shapes; strange how we treasure the ringlets that grew on false foreheads, and remember the words that were spoken by lips that were full of deceit, clinging apart to the ashes of roses and the petals of flowers whose fragrance a decade of years has now wafted away. Some pertinent lines from "A Fisher's Song" are recalled to my mind:

"The oar-stroke times the singing, The song falls with the oar,
And an echo in both is ringing I thought to hear no more."

And the ways of God are darkness, His judgement waiteth long; I He breaks the heart of woman With a fisherman's careless song."
