Making A Man

Hurry the baby as fast as you can. Hurry him, worry him, make him a man. Off with his baby clothes, get him in pants.

The Immemorial Part.

(Mary Synon, in Extension Magazine.) (Continued.) "Can't you see that is just why he needs some special training? If only he could go to college, even to the State University, he could study engineering.

An Ancient Foe

To health and happiness is Scrofula—as ugly as ever since time immemorial. It causes blemishes in the neck, disfigures the skin, inflames the mucous membrane, wastes the muscles, weakens the bones, reduces the power of resistance to disease and the capacity for recovery, and develops into consumption.

"Two of my children had scrofula sores which kept growing deeper and kept them from going to school for three months.ointments and medicines did no good until I began giving them Hood's Sarsaparilla. This medicine caused the sores to heal, and the children have shown no signs of scrofula since."—A. W. Moore, Woodstock, Ont.

will rid you of it, radically and permanently, as it has rid thousands.

dreams, her ambitions, to give a man his chance."

"It's what all women do."

"Well, I won't!"

Margaret Carling rose with a weariness that weighed down her shoulders. "It's your money," she said, with a sigh. "May it bring you happiness!" As she went out to the kitchen to start supper on the coal stove, her gaunt figure cast a fantastic shadow over Isabel.

The girl, motionless at the window, seemed to be watching the lights of the town; but she saw nothing beyond the dark window-pane, for her thoughts whirled with the problem her mother had raised. A tide of bitterness at the request was flooding her heart. Why should she, she asked herself, give up for Terry? Why should she sacrifice herself because she was a girl? Her sense of justice told her that, had she been a boy, her mother would not have asked her for the sacrifice. It was because Terry was the man of the family that she was to bow down before him, she told herself hotly. Well, if he were the man, why shouldn't he take a man's chances? She wasn't asking anything of him she would never ask anything of him if only she be given this fair start. She could take care of herself and of the rest of them, if only they let her go free now. If they didn't, if she had to stay here, she would never become the Isabel Carling she had in her to be, the woman with power to create, with genius to express the visioning within her. How could they, if they loved her, ask her to give it up?

the current. But was that reason enough why she should give up her own chance in order to shift him to another current that would take him to some common place success.

"I'm going out," she told her mother, oppressed by Margaret's persisting silence. The older woman asked her no question and she flung on her hat and coat, banging the door behind her.

The moon, still crescent, hung pendent on the rim of the woods as Isabel passed the gateway and took the walk toward the town. The still loveliness of the night went over her, erasing for a moment all personal emotion in the peace of that outdoor world that always stilled her spirit.

She had come out aimlessly, driven by worry over her mother's attitude toward her opportunity. Now, as she walked, she felt the need of sharing her good fortune—if she could now call it that—with someone, and she turned down the street toward the Wades, hoping to find Marion or Ann at home; but no one answered her ringing of the doorbell, and with realization that they must have gone already to the inevitable motion pictures, she retraced her steps.

She was passing the cottage that was Father Kennon's rectory when the priest came out, peering at her sharply in the darkness. "Is it Isabel Carling?" he asked her as she spoke to him. Then, "Are you looking for Terry?" he asked her unexpectedly.

"Why, no," she said, explaining her presence in the neighborhood.

"I thought—I rather hoped you were," he said, the earnestness of his voice arresting her intention as it always did. "I'm afraid, he went on, "that Terry has fallen in with a crowd who'll do him no good. He's playing pool at the Greek's every night, and I'm told that for boys of their age and circumstances, those boys he goes with are gambling for pretty high stakes. What are you going to do with Terry, Isabel?"

"Why, I've nothing to do with him," she said.

"Not your brother's keeper, eh? Well, perhaps not as much as your mother should be. But don't you know that Terry will do twice as much for you as he will do for her?"

"Yes, I know that," she admitted, "and I suppose that, if I go down to the Greek's and call him out, he'll come. But what's the use? Where can boys go in this town, Father Kennon? He'll drift back there in a week."

"Does he have to stay in the town?"

"You mean that you think he should go to work somewhere else?"

"I'd rather see him go to school somewhere, although I suppose that's out of the question. Still, if you could manage to get rates for him at one of the Catholic colleges. Don't you think he should go, if it's humanly possible? Terry's a good boy, Isabel, and it's too bad he can't have a chance."

The thought that everyone was pleading Terry's case, consciously or unconsciously, roused the girl's anger, but the worry of her problem was augmented by the priest's presentation of the boy's chance. "Father Kennon," she said, "if I had a thousand dollars which I had earned, should I spend it on my own education, or on Terry's?"

"On Terry's," he said.

She laughed bitterly. "Because he's a boy, I suppose?"

"No," he said, "but because you need the training that sacrifice, and not school, will give you."

"But it's not just," she flashed.

"Why should everyone expect me to give up for Terry?"

"Because you're strong," he said, "and Terry's weak. That's Christianity, Isabel. The right of the stronger is the creed of the pagan. The right of the weaker is the creed of the Christian. Does that settle your hypothetical case?"

He was moving away from her in the darkness, his voice a little amused, possibly in the thought that Isabel Carling had plans for the spending of a thousand dollars. "No, it doesn't," she said, regret rather than anger softening her tone. For what was the use of strength, she asked herself, if one had to use it for giving up rewards instead of enjoying them? Hurt,

HAD A VERY BAD GOLD and COUGH

DR. WOOD'S NORWAY PINE SYRUP CURED HER.

Mrs. C. Dresser, Bayfield, Ont., writes:—"I want to tell you of the benefit I got from your medicine."

Last winter I had a very bad cold and cough, but after taking two bottles of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup I was cured. I think it is about one of the best cough syrups that I know of. I always keep a bottle of it in the house so I can have it when I want it.

The other week I told an old lady about "Dr. Wood's." She had been sick for three weeks with bronchitis, and had been getting medicine from the doctor, but did not seem to be getting much better. She got one bottle of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, and she says it has done her more good than all the doctor's medicine she had been taking."

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is rich in the lung healing virtues of the Norway pine tree, and makes it the best remedy for coughs and colds.

The genuine is put up in a yellow wrapper; 3 pine trees the trade mark; price 25c. and 50c; manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

too, that Father Kennon had considered the query only from the side of her moral experience, and without thought of the development of her talent, thrust its iron into her rumination. Another screw tightened in her determination with the thought that only by material proof of her ability, won through hard study, would she be able to prove the only world she knew, this wretched little town that held her prisoner, the possession of a power that should justify her choice.

FLEISCHMANN'S YEAST

TO MAKE GOOD BREAD You must have Good Yeast

GOOD BREAD is, without question, the most important article of food in the catalog of man's diet; surely, it is the "staff of life."

Good bread is obtainable only by using the Best Yeast, the best flour, and adopting the best method of combining the two. Compressed Yeast is in all respects the best commercial Yeast yet discovered, and Fleischmann's Yeast is indisputably the most successful and best leaven known to the world. It is uniform in quality and strength. It saves time and labor, and relieves the housewife of the vexation and worry she necessarily suffers from the use of an inferior or unreliable leaven. It is, moreover, a fact that with the use of Fleischmann's Yeast, more loaves of bread of the same weight can be produced from a given quantity of flour than can be produced with the use of any other kind of Yeast.

This is explained by the more thorough fermentation and expansion which the minute particles of flour undergo, thereby increasing the size of the m-rs and at the same time adding to the nutritive properties of the bread. This fact may be clearly and easily demonstrated by any who doubt that there is economy in using Fleischmann's Yeast.

If you have never used this Yeast give it a trial. Ask your Grocer for a "Fleischmann" Recipe Book.

Your Soldier Boy Wants HICKEY'S TWIST

No matter where he is, or what other tobacco he can get, the Island soldier who chews tobacco is never satisfied with anything but HICKEY'S TWIST.
