New Manager Takes Over His Own and Mr. Glaubitz's Portion At $2,800 a Year.

FORMERLY COST $6,500

Incumbent Was So Long Kept in Office.

In view of the fact that E. V. Buchan an, new general manager of the public utilities commission, who took over his new duties officially this morning, is getting just half the salary paid his predecessor, H. J. Glaubitz, it is significant to note that no successor has been or will be appointed to Mr. Buchanan as electrical engineer. In other words, it might be pointed out that General Manager Buchanan at a salary of $2,500 per year, is prepared to do what General Manager Glaubitz got $5,000 per year for, while Electrical Engineer Buchanan got another $1,800, or a total of $6,800 in salaries as contrasted with

What's the Answer? Since these facts have come to light the inevitable question has been asked:

'What's the answer?" Apparently the answer is that the public utilities commission has been paying out $4,300 a year for the privilege of having H. J. Glaubitz as its general Certain members of the public utilities board have been freely criticising the council's attitude in what they please to call "extravagance" in securing outside engineering advice on civic questions. The aldermen have denied this charge, and are now prepared to put their finger on this neat little sum of $4,300 for surplus engineering and managerial work that the commission has been paying and ask "What's the

Why Was Office Retained? For the defence of the commission, the plea will doubtless be entered that the electrical department has practically completed all its installation work, and hat such a "luxury" as an electrical engineer is no longer a necessity, and that the office could well be abolished. If that is to be the alibi, then the question will undoubtedly be asked why the office wasn't abolished when the commission was paying $5,000 a year for expert advice? From December 26 until February 10 the newly-appointed general manage ran the three departments under the control of the utilities commission. It Glaubitz was on the "retired list." However, the acting general manager man aged to do his own work successfully as well as that of his chief, so this illustration only lends color to the somewhat pertinent query as to what Glaubitz did for his $5,000, and what the

The withdrawal of the Grand Trunk coal business is the most serious blow of the increasingly numerous setbacks the new line has had. A large sum of money will no doubt be required for terminals and the right-of-way to Richmond street granted by the railway commission to the L. and P. S. R. It has been estimated that at least $100,000 will be secured by the Grand Trunk if the matter goes to arbitration, as the old Southam building was regarded as the matter goes to arbitration, as the old Southam building was regarded as the most valuable piece of property which the railway secured when it purchased land for improvements.

ANOTHER HALF MILLION REQUIRED. Before adequate equipment to handle crowds, shops and terminals have been secured it is estimated that the citizens of London would, if they could be persuaded to do so, have to spend in the neighborhood of another half million

The Grand Trunk coal business will be handled from Rondeau, via Pere Marquette, to Chatham, and will be routed to the various destinations. The supply coal will be shipped to points in this division, and Grand Trunk officials stated today that the cost of handling would be no greater from Chatham than from London. The commercial coal handled from Chatham will give the Grand Trunk a somewhat longer haul than it has at present, and its proportion of the Question Asked Is Why Late rate from the starting point will be larger.

[Canadian Press.] London, June 1 .- "The German note morning, is a document of great importance in the evolution of sea law, and it raises questions, the substance of which concerns us all," says the Westminster Gazette in an editorial article this morning.

Continuing, the newspaper makes the point that previous to this war it was an unquestioned principle that a belligerent who seized an enemy mer-chantman was responsible for the safety of non-combatants, whether passengers or crew. In an extreme case, where for his own safety the belligerent sank the vessel, he was under the obligation to provide for the passengers and crew. "In the early stages of the war," the Westminster Gazette goes or to say, "we saw this obligation ably acknowledged by the captain of the Emden and other German cruisers." Not Question of Fact. "The American note stands for this principle. The German reply argues that danger from a suspicious craft is quickly that her crew and passengers are unable to escape. Originally Germany said that all neutrais entering the war zone would be liable to destruction; now she says she has no intention of attacking neu-trals who are not guilty of hostile acts. "It is evident that what is at stake is not a question of fact, but a principle; all facts of consequences are admitted in the reply."
