Cutters Are Too Slow. Savannah is visited by Itinerant en-forcement officers. At the time this investigation of the Bahama liquor traffic was made there hadn't been an enforcement officer in Savannah for two weeks. There are two revenue cutters, one at Miami and one at Savannah. Neither is speedy enough to catch a rum-running craft.

At Miami is the Vidette, a 38-ton former pleasure yacht with R. S. Miller as officer in command and a crew of four, the oldest of the latter not more than 25. There is a one-pound gun that is out of order.

It costs $10 an' hour for fuel alone to run the "Vidette." Every time the vesse' goes out Miller has to put men at work to bail out water. Vidette Has Handicaps.

The Vidette has a "speed" of six knots an hour. Rum-running craft make 15 to 25 knots. The rum-runners an enter shallow water, over rees and sandbars and disappear into thousands of covers along Florida's coast line, while the Vidette draws too much water and is too slow to fol-

Bootleggers have nothing to fear from the revenue cutter, Tybee, a 23-year-old boat that cannot go to sea. She is 48 tons, her bottom is befouled her coal-burning engines antiquated, and she makes four miles an hour. Warrant Officer Henry Buchanan has a crew of five negroes.

One night Buchanan got a tip that a big cargo of whiskey was to be unloaded into small boats outside the three-mile limit. He took the Tybee out. A heavy sea almost swamped her, and, while lying in a small stream awaiting the liquor convoy, he had to fire up. The boiler emitted a noise that could be heard for miles. When he "rushed" out of the creek at four miles an hour all the liquor speed boats had fed.

There is another revenue cutter at Savannah, the Yamacraw. But this vessel draws so much water that it can proceed only in deep channels, whereas the light rum craft frequent the impassable coves and sandbars. The Yamacraw is on duty for rescue work and winter patrol only.

Officers Are Too Few.
Each enforcement officer in Southern Georgia has eight counties to cover. Unable to strike at the big source of smusgled liquor, they spend their time raiding stills—insignificant in quantity of product in comparison with the Bahama traffic.

Enforcement Agent Devlin at Miami has 200 miles of coast and four counties to cover. Most of this territory is in the wildness of the Everglades.
