"At Revelstoke," he said in chatting "At Revelstoke," he said in chatting about his trip, "I found vast changes since I was there last year. Fully a hundred and sixty buildings have gone up there in the past twelve months, and the town is showing rapid and substantial growth. In reference to the trouble caused by the Columbia river wearing away the banks I telegraphed Hon. Mr. Tarte, minister of public works at Ottawa, asking him to allow Mr. Roy, the Dominion government engineer, to make a to do so. Seeing the urgency of the matter, however, I had an engineer sent to examine and report to the provincial government, though I consider that the power at the provincial continuous government ought to act in

Turning to politics, the Premier said:

"I found at all points a very general feeling in favor of the present government. There were, of course, in places, complaints and many requirements, but the people generally seemed to appreciate that this is a vast country with a limited population, which made it very costly to run, and it was co Hon. At Armstrong the co-operative flour mill is now running night and day and is a marked evidence of the advantage to farmers of cooperation, the mill having already paid two dividends though only having been established eighteen months. It is likely, too, that dairying will be taken up largely in the vicinity of Kelowna, and the farmers are also going into cooperative pork packing, that part of the province being particularly adapted to this industry. The great want is a railway from Penticton to Boundary Creek. "I stayed at Kamloops a day and visited the mines there, some of which show very promising ore. They are so situated as to be very accessible to the railway.

"On my way home I stayed over at Vancouver, where I met Sir William Van Horne and had a long interview with him, the Rossland and Penticton line among them, as well as the extention to Hope, and also spoke of the importance of giving greater facilities to the commerce of Victoria, which he as-
