Frank Hodgins the Victim of Careless Handling of a Gun.

Frank Hodgins the Victim of Careless Handling of a Gun Frank C. Hodgins, 23, a clerk in the employ of Wyld, Grasett & Darling, and residing at 37 Henry-street, accidentally shot himself near Long Branch yesterday morning. While picking up his gun, the muzzle pointing towards him, something fouled the trigger, causing the gun to discharge the contents into the young man's hip. Dr. Moses Aikens of Mimico Asylum was summoned and dressed the wounds. A companion, Mr. Carlyle, brought the injured man to the city, driving him to the General Hospital. His injuries, although very serious, will not necessarily prove fatal, and it is probable that he will recover unless complications arise.

Mr. Rotan began his argument at 2.50 o'clock. He said: "Gentlemen, of the jury, there is no one in this court room who feels a greater weight of responsibility than I have. You have a human life in your hands, and if you are not guided by the evidence you violate your oath. If you allow the references to persons that have crept into the case, before it came up through thepublic print you do him an injustice. The two plan-ned to swindle the Fidelity Mutual Life

Association of Philadelphia out of $10,-000. The plot was for Pitezel to take out the policy and then to represent that he died. A bogus corpse was to be substituted for his supposed body. The plot progressed so that Pitezel came to this city and rented the house at No. 1316 Callowhill-street under the came to this city and rented the house at No. 1316 Callowhill-street under the name of Benjamin F. Perry.

Pitezel was a man who drank, and when intoxicated he talked of the various schemes that he and Holmes had been in. Then it was, probably, that Holmes conceived the idea of killing him. The theory of the prosecution was that Pitezel must have been in a drunken stupor when Holmes went to drunken stupor when Holmes went to the house, and while he was in that condition he chloroformed him to death. Then Holmes arranged the body so as to make it appear as if an explosion had taken place and Pitezel had been killed by it.

zel had been killed by it.

Then Holmes, taking Miss Yohe, whom he married, with two other wives living, fled from Philadelphia that night to Indianapolis. Holmes easily persuaded Mrs. Pitczel, who was cognizant of the swindling scheme, that her husband was not dead. He came Mr. Graham in his speech at the beginning of the trial.

This Judge Arnold refused to do.
Then Mr. Graham arose and began his closing address to the jury. The district attorney began by quietly congratulating the jury upon their prospect of a speedy release from their confinement of the jury box. He stated to them that he had voluntarily relinquished his right to make a final argument, and that he had left that privilege to the defendant's attorney. her husband was not dead. He camon here with J. D. Howe, a St. Louis lawyer, and Alice Pitezel, a daughter of the dead man. They identified the body buried in Potter's Field as that of Pitezel and the $10,000 insurance privilege to the defendant's attorney. He merely asked them to reason with money was paid. Holmes met Mrs Pitezel and swindled her out Pitezel and swindled her out of her share, save $500. The woman's share was to have been $10,000, less $285 paid for funeral expenses.

With the knowledge of his guilt he fled from city to city, bearing in his train three of the Pitezel children, Mrs. Pitezel and his wife. Not once did he allow these three separate parties to meet. At Indianapolis he is accused of killing the boy Howard. At Toronto he left behind him two more ghastly evidences of his flight in the duty to acquit him, and that speedily. The commonwealth, he said, had proved every step of its case from the very ed every step of its case from the very beginning, and had made the chain of evidence perfect. Mr.Graham then returned to the evidence taken, and reading from it, reviewed it. He skimmed quietly over the testimony of the more unimportant witnesses, and refreshed the jury's memory of the evidence.

On the more important testimony Mr. Graham dealt at greater length for the jury's henefit. He exposed with ghastly evidences of his flight in the shape of the two murdered Pitezel children. Miss Ganthony, however, retained Lawyer Butler to protect her interests.
Several days later Miss Ganthony received word from Mr. Butler to call at his office. She was then stopping in Flushing with her husband, on her attorney's advice. She immediately went to the lawyer's office.

"Mrs. Clarke, permit me to introduce you to Mrs. Clarke," said the lawyer, when Miss Ganthony entered.

Both Mrs. Clarke, were greatly affected, and the one who claimed matrimonial seniority assured Miss Ganthony that she was sincerely sorry for being the innocent cause of the latter's calamity. The proofs which the senior Mrs. Clarke adduced were, declared by the lawyer to be sufficient to warrant Miss Ganthony in bringing an action for an annulment of her marriage.

Miss Ganthony went that night to the house of her brother, Richard Ganthony, on Long Island, having notified Mr. Clarke that she was done with him.

Two Wives Awaited Him.

Clarke was invited to call the following day at Lawyer Butler's office and make a statement. When he called he found his two wives awaiting him. Clarke was overcome by the suddennes of it all. He stammered: "What brings you here? I'm divorced from you," and then fell in a faint. The rival wives stooped to loosen his collar. The movement brought their heads so close together that their cheeks touched. They both drew back, each telling the other that she should have precedence. In the meantime Clarke, tiring of his position on the floor, got up and threw himself into a chair.

The result of this interview was that Mrs. Lillian Clarke and her husband left the
