IRISH NATIONAL LEAGUE. President Fitzgerald's Invitation to Parnell. The officers of the Irish National League are using their endeavors to induce Mr. Parnell to attend the Philadelphia Convention. In accordance with the general desire of all Irish-Americans, President Fitzgerald has sent the following letter to Mr. Parnell:

LINCOLN, N.E., May 2, 1899. Charles Stewart Parnell, Esq., House of Commons, London, Eng. Dear Sir:—I am without reply to my former communication regarding the Convention to be held in Philadelphia next July, but I feel satisfied your time is so much absorbed by the Commission and other circumstances of your position that you have not had opportunity to give the matter due consideration.

The holding of a Convention is an absolute necessity, from the fact that it is a universal sentiment among our people in America, that it should take place. Popular opinion in America is very imperious and it would be useless to run counter to it besides. These conventions keep alive the current of national sentiment and impress our American friends with the fact that the Irish question is a burning question and one that affects a very large and powerful element of our population, to a degree that makes it worthy the close attention of the ablest American statesmen, who are naturally anxious that no cause outside of direct American interests should influence the relations of the United States with any foreign power. The importance of the Irish question is brought out more prominently by the holding of the Irish-American Convention, and as a reflex action must impress the better class of English public men with the necessity of a just settlement of the Irish claims, as a first step towards establishing the cordiality of feeling that ought to exist between the two great powers speaking a common language and inhering more or less common traditions. It is a favorable conclusion, then, that our Convention must be held in Philadelphia on the 9th and 10th of July next.

The presence of yourself and some of your colleagues would have an immensely beneficial result, and in all cases of purpose I beg of you to give an invitation of your American friends and kindred your most favorable consideration. Here is the greater Ireland, and your coming from the old land would bridge the seas and make the separated Gael a united race, with one object and one sentiment, not of seeking vengeance for past wrongs but for securing to the people of Ireland that measure of liberty which their kindred enjoy in America, and under the protection of which they have grown rich and powerful. Irish-Americans are a busy people; they live not in the past, but in the present and only seek a just and practical solution of the Irish question. I cannot overestimate the advantages to be derived from a visit from yourself in particular, and from some of your colleagues. It is a general sentiment that you ought to come, and as a further indication of that feeling I enclose you a copy of the letter of Vice-President Hugh McCaffrey to the National Secretary, in which he urges it very strongly. An early reply is solicited so that we may make America ring with the news of your coming.

Yours faithfully, JOHN FITZGERALD. Notice of Removal. The Indian Difficulty. According to the London Times the Dewan Raghunath has written a strong protest to the British Government against its course in allowing child marriages in India. He points out that British blood and money have flowed like water in efforts to stamp out slavery in many lands, yet he charges, the British government sits with folded hands while "a father is permitted with impunity to sell in marriage a daughter of eight years to a man of 47, already rendered notorious by his marital tyranny. The child-wife is then segregated from the companionship of her own sex, and is so persecuted and terrorized that, child as she is, she is driven to attempt suicide rather than continue to submit herself any longer to the capricious tyranny and odious intimacy of her so-called husband. And yet the British Magistrate is compelled to state in open court that the law gives him no power to restrain revolting oppression of this character, as it is justified by law." Of course, a difficulty in the case that England cannot, in view of her relations with India, impose her will upon the people. Therefore, it is necessary to proceed by argument, and by the silent influence of good example, and by the patient presentation of the truth, for the social difficulty to be overcome is very great.
