The French War Office issued the following communique Saturday night:

"Today the activity of the Germans has been general on the whole front, but all their attacks have been repulsed, notably those which they directed on Cambrin, Aix-Noulette and Le Quesnoy-en-Santeire. "We have taken a few trenches in the region of Thiepval, at the north of Albert, reoccupying our former trenches at the northeast of Vailly, and taken at the point of the bayonet the Village of St. Remi, on the heights of the Meuse.'

BERLIN LESS BOASTFUL.

'On the east nothing new has transpired.'

TURKISH FORTS DESTROYED.

Despatches from Rome and Athens, not officially confirmed, assert that the Turkish forts on the Dardanelles have been completely destroyed by the bombardment of British warships.

The report, previously published, that a Japanese squadron has captured the German cruisers Scharnhorst and Gneisenau is gaining more persistent circulation, and it is also announced that Japanese warships were sighted last Friday off Callao, southward bound.

News of a naval engagement between a squadron of Japanese ships and German warships in the Pacific Ocean momentarily is expected. The censors are concealing news of the Japanese naval move-

NO WEAK SPOT LOCATED.

Notwithstanding that fresh onslaughts have been made by the Germans against the allied forces all along the great line of battle, the kaiser's forces either have been repulsed, or else held back well in hand. The Germans evidently have been unable to discover the desired weak spot in the line of the allies.

The notably stout and effective resistance on the part of the British army at Ypres seems to have caused the German forces to launch their newly-concentrated attack against the Franco-British troops between Arras and Lille, instead of southeast of Ypres, as at first planned The popularity of and attempted.
