FEW RECRUITS COME TO LOCAL CENTRE; ONLY FIVE MONDAY

Slowness of Yesterday Unusually Pronounced.

Recruits were scarcer than the proverbial hen's teeth at the armory on Monday. Although the centre is usually slower than the other days of the week, for recruiting, Monday of this week was exceptionally so. The final count, when the lists were closed for the day, showed that only five recruits had been attracted to the centre. The remaining four came from this district. Three of the men went to the Canadian Engineers, one to the Royal Flying Corps, and one to the 1st Depot Battalion, W. O. Regiment.

Delays in the train service are believed to be responsible to some extent for the lack of volunteers, as only one came through from the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission across the border. The following volunteers were attracted: Gene Mann, Cleveland, E. P. Dicker, F. Freeman, R. M. Daly, and W. H. Bailey, London.

POKER TACTICS DEFEATED FRITZ AND WON ADDED DECORATION FOR LONDON OFFICER OF PRINCESS PATS

"Bluff" of Major Hugh Niven Was Raised Again and Again But Never Called—Interesting War Reminiscences of London Boy Appear in New York Paper.

Writing in the New York Herald, Major Hugh Niven, U.S.C., war M.C., of this city, who is now serving again with the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry in London, gives some of the most interesting sidelights of the war game. The title of the major's article is "Playing POKER With Fritz." It follows: I went to France a little more than three years ago, when our forces were slightly the underdog. The enemy had more guns than we had and better prepared positions, and we had rather hard times. We have proved during the last year, when things became somewhat equal, just what the Allies can do in the way of fighting. Today on the western front in France the Allies hold every prominent position and tactical advantage in both Flanders and France. We have proved that despite all the ingenuity and skill the Germans possess in the way of making fortifications, not one single spot have they been able to hold, not one single height have they been able to hold when we went after them.

This war started off last year and the year before and the early part of this year with the Germans engaged in fighting a purely defensive war. Whenever we went over the top and after them we found that they were dug out and the dugout was a very fine idea of the German in the first place, but he gave up that idea. He found that the British and French armies in France followed the barrage so closely that they could not get up out of the dugouts before we were on them. They were not intended to stay in the dugouts, but the Germans were built to protect the men during the big bombardment. The dugouts were built to protect the men in some way affected, and the orders issued by the general staff showed the men coming up when the light started did not quite hold good. They did not seem to like to come up where the noise was so loud. The Germans all along the line wherever they were dug out.

A "pillbox" is a reinforced concrete structure. Most of them are about 40 feet long, 15 feet wide and possibly 12 feet high. The front and side walls are about four feet thick. The top is from six to ten feet thick, and the rear walls about three feet. One built as I have described would be divided into four or possibly five cubicles, each of these with a wall inside two feet thick.

In the front wall of each of these cubicles a loophole for a machine gun would be cut. The machine guns were usually constructed. Recently I saw some seventy which we had taken and I saw only one that had been knocked down by shell fire. They will stand a most tremendous shock. The German general staff issued orders when the light started the men were to come out of these "pillboxes" (they were only made for assembling points), all except two or three men with the machine gun, and the infantry was to spread out on each side in shell line. The German general staff fell down, and I did not find anybody outside the nine I had the privilege of watching being taken.

It seems that when you put Fritz in a pillbox he has to leave it, and I did not see during all the fighting I was in lately a single German who did not throw up his hands and run.

When we were a hundred dard yards away, he did fairly good shooting, and he got within fifty to fifteen yards of him—there was something about "kammerad" in the German mind. That is what has happened over during the last three years. In every battle the Germans have been surprised. We have held him and we have beaten him. Three years ago I believe the German army was in a state of panic. The allied armies—perhaps an speaking of the British, I believe they were in a state of panic. The most about it was not ready. We were not trained as we should have been trained, and if we could not break through three years ago I do not believe he has any possibility of breaking through this year.

There is only one way to take the German "pillboxes" and that is by getting around to the back door. You are bound to lose a certain number of men going up to them. At Passchendaele there seemed to be no way of getting up to them. They killed 300,000 or 400,000, and wounded probably 750,000 or 1,000,000. There is only one way to kill them now, and that is to go after them. We went after them on the Somme, and we killed, took prisoners and wounded a great many. The same happened at Vimy Ridge—we took another 15,000 or 20,000, and Messines we took 20,000 or 30,000 and killed 20,000 or more; at Passchendaele we took a great many prisoners and killed a great many, and so on. At Cambrai we did the same thing—we took 10,000 or 15,000, and killed 10,000 or 15,000. And in every story being in the war, you are able to calculate about how many you can kill. The object of the Cambrai drive, no matter how far we went or where we went, or how far we went, I believe was achieved when we killed those 10,000 to 20,000 Germans and wounded another 50,000.

If the United States sends over a vast number of aeroplanes, that will have a tendency to shorten the war. Whenever you can stop an aeroplane from coming over the British lines you put out the German's eyes. The only way he can find out what we are doing behind our lines with any certainty, which any speed of aeroplane observation. When we can keep him from coming behind our lines and see where we are massing troops, seeing where we are massing guns, why, we can bring off a surprise and do a great deal of damage. In two or three of the battles we have been in lately our air supremacy has allowed us a great many privileges we did not have in 1915.

MERCURY FELL 32 POINTS FOLLOWING HEAVY RAINSTORM

Cold Spell Only For Today, Say Probs.

The weatherman predicts that it will be fair with a rising temperature tomorrow, after today's cold spell. The weatherman said that the mercury fell 32 degrees, or 13 degrees above freezing, and before 8 o'clock this morning it was 13 degrees above zero, making a change of 22 degrees in twelve hours.

Last night's rainstorm was heavy all over the province. At Port Stanley, 5 inches of rain fell, and at Toronto .56

The disturbance which marked the Great Lakes yesterday has now reached the St. Lawrence and gales in that neck of the woods are the order of the day.

LOCAL BRANCH OF H.D.S.A. FORMED AT MEETING LAST NIGHT

Provisional Officers of Association Elected.

Lieut. T. Whitwell Birkett, provincial organizer of Toronto, formed a local branch of the Honorably Discharged Soldiers' Association (H.D.S.A.) at a well-attended meeting held in the M. C. A. last evening.

It gives me pleasure to speak to you, men of the C. E. F., I remarked in his opening address. "Men whom nothing can daunt, men who will put through anything they attempt. All honor to the men of the front line trenches, who have written their names in Prussian blood on the fields of France and Flanders. Nothing is too good for them."

Other men just as brave, who enlisted but through no fault of their own could not get overseas, have been discharged from the service, and left to their fate, and these men are the ones for whom no person apparently cares.

To protect these men was the purpose of the H. D. S. A., and Lieut. Birkett stated that every person eligible should join the local organization. It was no use for an individual to claim anything from the Government, he pointed out, but a body of men could press their demands, and receive favorable consideration.

Organization of the service, and true comradeship, he asserted, was the one thing necessary for the discharged men who had been overseas. Prior to the military service these discharged men were subjected to abuse by recruiting sergeants and civilians alike, the speaker declared, and this should not have been the case. The Government could easily have issued a badge, referring to the classes to whom the Government are issuing badges the Organization of the service, and true comradeship, he asserted, was the one thing necessary for the discharged men who had been overseas. Prior to the military service these discharged men were subjected to abuse by recruiting sergeants and civilians alike, the speaker declared, and this should not have been the case. The Government could easily have issued a badge, referring to the classes to whom the Government are issuing badges the
