CANADA GIVES JAPAN

without obtaining control of emigration from Japan. The Canadian Government, apparently forgot about Mr. Lytle's desperate plea.

Five weeks later, it sent a dispatch to the colonial secretary, pressing for early settlement of the treaty. Mr. Lytle replied that he was awaiting a reply to his telegram of July 11.

A great deal had been said, Mr. Borden remarked, of the disregard of British government for Canadian interests, but these gentlemen had forgotten the warning by Canada.

On Sept. 25, 1905, a cablegram was sent to Mr. Lytle, that the government had agreed to adhere absolutely and without reserve to the treaty.

Regarding the assurances conveyed by Mr. Noose, Japanese consul-general to Canada, Mr. Borden had yet to learn that a consul-general had any authority to give them. The real object of Mr. Lytle's visit to Japan, Mr. Borden said, was to induce Japan to exercise the control we should ourselves exercise.

Assurance Not Great.

Coming to the letter of Foreign Minister Hayashi, written to Mr. Lemieux at Tokyo on Dec. 23, Mr. Borden observed that while it was a polite and courteous letter, it gave no great assurance to Canada.

Why should "special conditions in Canada," which should be the care of the parliament of Canada, be subject to appeal from this government to Canada, and the only remedy outside of denunciation of the treaty would be an appeal to Japan by the Canadian Government. There might be a new government in Japan at any time, which would sweep away all present regulations. Japan's previous assurances had proved of no avail to prevent an influx of her people.

Mr. Borden had suggested, to give the arrangement a fair trial, and he hoped that the assurances given by Japan would result as satisfactorily as Mr. Lemieux had hoped they would. That, however, did not alter the situation nor did it affect the principle involved, the principle for which we ought to stand, namely, that Canada should not enter into any treaty engagement which would prevent our control of immigration to this country.

Mr. Borden concluded by moving his amendment.
