de resistance is an especially beautiful portrait of Madame le Pompadour, painted by the celebrated artist, La Tour. It is less than an inch and a half by two inches and is set in a heavy gold mounting, surrounded by brilliants, and was presented to the actress by a friend, who obtained it at a sale of antiques in Paris.

No city which Miss Boland visits is two small for her to look carefully about to see if she can discover anything which can be added to the collection.

Actresses and Their Fads

Pretty nearly every actress of distinction has a pet fad of some sort. Sometimes it is jewelry, sometimes plate, sometimes horses and sometimes plate, sometimes horses and sometimes hats. Indeed, it is stated that Fritzing Scheff can rarely pass a handsome millimery confection without becoming its possessor, and there are others who go in for collections of programs, manuscripts of plays, musical instruments and all sorts of things.

Mary Boland, the beautiful and talented leading woman for Francis Wilson in "When Knights Were Bold," has a very delightful fad, albeit a somewhat expensive one, for Miss Boland's particular delight is in the collection of old-time prints and miniatures. It was in looking over the splendid collection.

Canadians were living in an industrial and commercial world, but were they willing to come me from their battles with less sense of honor than that of the military Spartans? The panic and prostration of recent months was the result of distrust men had of their neighbors honesty. He wished Americans could have the clear, calm sense of British honor about which there could be no doubt. He would like to see that ideal in their factories and warehouses.

The States had begun in revolution. Canada began with loyalty. He believed that the great traditions of the French and English pioneers be a national pride to Canadians, and he hoped these things would assist in the building up a great conception of commercial honor among the The United States restriction of candidates to the constituency in which they live was a crippling regulation, and kept the best and biggest men out
