Even Civilian Feels Fairly Safe in Underground Quarters.

RESPECT FOR ENEMY

Fighting Qualities of Germans Admitted by Seasoned Campaigners.

BY THOMAS T. CHAMPION.

Canadian Associated Press Cable. LONDON, Sept. 4.—"I suppose you will give them the usual amount about the splendid spirit of the Canadians in the trenches. Do you think the old folk at home want to be told that?"

The remark came from the major, whose dugout I was entering for the night. It was addressed good-humoredly enough, but there was a suspicion of sarcasm in the first sentence and a note of exostulation in the second.

I hastened to assure my host of the dugout I had not the least intention of charging upon the splendid spirit of the Canadians in Flanders.

Touching my friend, the major, and the story of which he was doing me the honors, an officer of the trench staff had brought me up as dark was coming on. The dugout was about 12 feet square and five feet deep.

The entrance was small, but carefully camouflaged with canvas. A couple of candles stuck safely in the trench, and the heavy timber supports, gave an abundance of light.

The trench was about 12 feet wide and 12 feet deep. The entrance was small, but carefully camouflaged with canvas.

clock-work regularity, each cutting the purpose of the commanders, while the French and English acted together as if one army.

The first stage of the infantry action was entirely on the flank and at Mouquet Farm, where the Australians were at it again. They had been wanting that farm, these men fellows from under the southern cross, had taken and lost it once. This time they pushed it back beyond it, and nothing more picturesque had happened in the Somme battle than these hard ratchets, who can shoot and could have told where the big guns were out-of-door, going against the Prussian Guards.

Guillemont the Goal. Later, the big business of the day began from Deville Wood southward thru to the Somme. All the murderous power on both sides, the machine guns, were directed to the utmost. Guillemont was the prize the British sought.

Two weeks ago this village was the most completely devastated of any on the front, and the British had been pounding it day after day with every calibre of gun. Guillemont is no longer a village, but an iron and lead mine.

Twice the British had carried their charges into it and even thru it, only to be forced out. It is estimated that 200,000 shells were fired into it and that 3,000,000 bullets traversed it.

Swept Thru Village. Rapping forward and connecting up shell gun trenches, the British worked their way, aided by occasional charges, to the village, but the Germans established themselves in a small trench salient southwest of the village, where they were only 30 or 40 yards from the Germans, and so near that the British guns did not fire on them for fear of hitting their own men.

Here the Germans had a machine gun so placed that it swept the trench, and the trenches, but the British managed to get across, and about midday swept thru the village of Guillemont, cleaning up nests of machine guns, and in a brilliant advance, the other side, establishing themselves in a sunken road.

South of Guillemont, one section of the Prussian Guard resisted their advance in Fallemont farm and Wedge-wood, and here all the afternoon concentrated their fire in a brilliant advance, proceeding. Here the Guard had high ground, which they turned into a fortress, and they were evidently determined to keep faith with their position.

Tornado of Shell Fire. No sooner had the British taken Guillemont and swept thru it than the Germans turned on it a tornado of shell fire from their immense concentration of guns in this section. The whole movement was like that of July 1, with the army swinging on its pivot, the French to the right, and the British to the left, under the protection of an amazing hurricane of shell fire, co-operating in a brilliant advance.

From a hill, the blue of their soldiers, and the khaki of the British could be seen side by side as they charged, and, as the trenches were taken, the green figures of the Germans filling back to the rear as prisoners, completed the spectacle under an unbroken stream of shells, which were falling.

The guns were so thick behind both the British and French infantry, and the action was so furious that it appeared imagination.

Kaiser's Vanished Hopes. Prussian Guard prisoners taken said the German Emperor had let it be known to his troops that there would be no winter campaign. They believed the decision was coming in this summer fight, and in the fighting of the next month. As for food, they had never wanted for it. The Prussian Guard was plenty.

The fiercest struggle of all was for the possession of Ginchy, which commanded high ground. When the Australian Front co-operated with the corps headquarters, the British had more than half the village, and the struggle amidst the ruins, hidden by curtains of shell smoke, was bitterly continuing.
