His reveries were so deep and so unfortunate that he at last hit upon the desired plan, a novel expedient, indeed—yet they are always most successful with such women as pretend to be invulnerable.

The next day our amorous here returned to the island, studied the ground, made his arrangements, and when Mme. D—, had resumed her secenstemed place, he slipped away to a remote and retired shelter, and after having divested himself of his clothing he entered the stream. An excellent swimmer and skilful diver, he trusted to his aquatic talents for the success of his enterprise. He swam to the end of the island with the greatest precaution, favored by the chances of the bank and the bushes which hung their dense folided and sealed, and on arriving near the spot where Mme. D. was sitting he made a dive, and lightly seizing the hook he attached to it this letter.

Mme, D. perceiving the movement of her line, supposed that a fish was biting. The young man had returned as he came; he had doubled the cape, which, extending out into the water separated them from each other, and had regained his post without the least noise in his passage under the willows. The deed was done.

White: D. pulled in his passage under the willows.

Wine: D pulled in her line, and what was her surprise to observe dangling upon the barb of her hook, not the expected ahiner, but an unexpected latter!

the transfixed billet, she read upon the envelspe her name!

So then, this letter which she had fished up was addressed to her!

This was somewhat miraculous. She was afraid. Her moubled glance scrutinized the surrounding space, but there was nothing to he become on heard; all was still and lonely still so land and water.

She quitted her seat, but took away the letter. As soon as she was alone and alcosted.

She quitted her seat, but took away the letter. As soon as she was alone, and closeted with herself, and as soon as the paper was dry—a paper perfectly waterproof, and written upon with indelible ink—she unsealed the letter, and commenced its persual.

A declaration of love i cried she at the first words. What insolence !

Still, the insolence had come to her in such

Still, the insolence had come to her in each as extraordinary manner that her curiosity would not suffer her to treat this letter as she had so many others—pitilessly burn it without a reading.

No, she read it quite through. The lover, who dated his note from the bottom of the river, had skillfully adopted the allegory, and introduced himself as a grotesque inhabtant of the waters. The fable was gracefully managed, and with the jesting tone which he had adopted was mingled a true, serious, arcent sentiment, expressed with beauty and and, and shuddered as, a moment after, she perceived the movement of the nook.

Mass. D was no believer in magic, still there was something strange and supernatural in all this.

She had an idea of throwing back the letter into the stream, but relinquished it. The most stubborn and haughty woman is always disarmed in face of that strange mystery which eaptivates her imagination.

This time an answer was requested. It was porkspa, premature, yet the audacious request obtained a full success. The reply was written after some hesitation and the hook dropped into the stream charged with a letter which was intended to say nothing, and affected a sort of badinage, which was nevertheless a bulletin of a victory gained over the harsh severity of woman until then unapproachable.

And the word was written.

The young man appeared, and was not a loser. The gift of pleasing belonged to his person as much as to his style, and he had made such rapid progress under water that it was easy to complete his conquest on land. Thus firm. Decrease a conquest on land. Thus firm. Decrease a conquest on land. Thus firm. Decrease a conquest on land. The street of the vow which she had taken never to re-marry.—
