der by succouring the poor, and supporhis cause. Unless these objects are any ced in our appropriation of the means rusted to us, they will prove a stare and curse; but whenever they are lawfully I rightconsly employed, they will prove a itive benefit-a blessing of no ordinary tracter. An attentive perusal of the ered Volume will supply both precepte I examples for a consecrated use of temral means, in the liberal maintenance of ristian charity and religious objects. No terminate standard of contribution can be ablished by man. An enlightened conence, guided by the principles of hely rit, is the only sure directory; and whilst rich are required to communicate acrang to their abundance, the poorest ould be encouraged to give according to rir ability, from the consideration, that, f there be first a willing mind, it is accep-I according to that a man liath, and not cording to that be lath not." The subet, thus hastily glancod at, is eminently actical, and worthy of more than a mere ssing thought. It may be regarded as a st of the amount of concern we take in e interests of suffering humanity and in ose of our Redcemer's kingdom, as well of the extent of our practical obedience the commands of God. "He that giveth ito the poor shall not lack: but he that deth his eyes shall have many a curse;" , as it is in another place expressed,-He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth ito the Lord; and that which he hath ven will be pay him again." "Charge em that are rich in this world, that they e not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain ches, but in the living God, who giveth us chly all things to enjoy; that they do good. at they be rich in good works, ready to istribute, willing to communicate; laying p in store for themselves a good foundation gainst the time to come, that they may lay old on eternal life." First giving their own dves to the Lord, and unto his Church by ie will of God, they should abound in the race of christian benevolence; thus preenting themselves and their substance to ie Author of all good, their gifts will be metitled, and graciously accepted by him

ENGLISH DISTRICT MEETINGS.

WE have only time to state that the Watchman of May 22nd, contains gratifying accounts of several ef our English District Meetings. The good cause of God, in connection with Wesleyan Methodism, is still progressing in England. In some of the Districts quite an increase of members is reported. The Connexional funds have been well sustained.
