SOCIETY'S PROBLEM

No doubt great difficulty must attend the resumption of mankind at large of their rights to the soil. The question of compensation to the existing proprietors is a complicated one, one perhaps that cannot be settled in a strictly equitable manner. Had we to deal with the parties who originally robbed the human race of its heritage, we might make short work of the matter, but unfortunately most of our land-owners are men who have, either mediately or immediately, either by their own acts or the acts of their ancestors, given for their estates equivalents of honestly earned wealth, believing that they were investing their earnings in a perfectly legitimate manner. To justly estimate and liquidate the claims of such is one of the most intricate problems society will one day have to solve.—HERBERT SPENCER.
