Her husband kissed her again, and without another word left the room. Giving some directions to the neighbor who was still in the shop, he set out at once on his journey. He drove into Hampton and took the first train to London, where he intended to tell his father-in-law the whole story, and learn what details he could; for he did not wish ever to bring up the subject again, so far as Lucy was concerned.

Now it happened that Mr. Harker was late at the office that night, bending, sad and wrinkled, over his interminable papers; the whole business connected with which was so repugnant to him. Sigh after sigh escaped his thin lips, as he read the piteous appeals, and knew that he must refuse them; must deal out fresh misery against his will. It was hard to be the tool of such a merciless fiend; to be the servant of such a master of deceit, villainy and fraud; but so greatly did the father love his child that he would scarce have hesitated in committing a murder had Jasper Vermont set that crime as a price of his forgiveness and silence. He would have purchased his daughter's safety and happiness with his heart's blood if need be.

Unconscious of the release that was so fast approaching, he worked or settled in order the various accounts which Vermont would require to be laid before him on the following day and entering in a book concise his notes of the debts and difficulties which placed dozens of Jasper's acquaintances within his power. A knock at the door started him and roused him from his task. Hast-
