On June 4 a lady who said she came from Boston, came to the house of Mr. Alfred Hiderkin, Wolfville, and asked permission to walk on the lawn from the street past the house to the railroad. She wanted to view the exquisite beauty of the scene. She seemed profoundly impressed with the representative trees and shrubbery along this lane, the forest trees with varied shades of green and yellow and the apple, pear, plum, cherry and peach trees covered with blossoms, delicate pink, white and red, forming a long vista of delicate color and variety. She thought it necessary to say that she had never seen anything so beautiful as she had seen in the United States, spent a winter in Los Angeles among the orange groves, yet she had not seen anything to equal this. She repeatedly affirmed this fact.

Professor and Mrs. Clarkson often visited these orchards. They said it looked like Fairy Land and found the fruit delicious. They also climbed the hill to the south to a certain spot where the outlook is wonderfully varied and pleasing to the eye. They were also in Wolfville and therefore know where else in America.
