Whose tips are roy still.

Where are the eyes that oft of old

Have watched in weal or woe,

While the sun set in red and gold, A thousand years ago?

And sang in thrilling strain, Duetting with his neighbor thrush, Till the air thrilled again; And all the wood with music rang, Their voices echoed so-

A linnet perched upon the bush,

Who listened while the linnet sang A thousand years ago? Where are they-all those beating hearts That lived and throbbed like ours,

Who acted out their separate parts, And used their various powers?-The hearts that gasped, and thrilled, and burned, And writhed in passion's glow, Or with the tenderest pity yearned,

A thousand years ago? Where are they ?---haply over some, The "dust to dust" was said, Who slumbered each in hallowed tomb, Till angels wake the dead.

Some linger in the dreamless sleep In occasional caves; And mighty fragrant forests ween Their dew on other's graves.

But all their souls, we must be sure The graves can never hold-The mortal essence will endure When hearts and hands grow cold They may be floating round us now, Above us and beneath, The very breeze that fans our brow May be a spirit's breath.

I doubt not but they mark with sighs Our faults and follies all : Oh! sad to taink some spirit's eye Like us the end of time they wait, Their final doom to know, Whatever was their earthly state A thousand years ago.

THE BLACK SCHOONER.

BT SANDT GRISWOLD.

Many years ago the Pacific ocean had been infested by a 'Bill' Schoouer, he exclaimed, 'See, sir!'

The captain turned his eye on the Schoouer, when he saw her main-top-mast bend suddenly astern and in many iestances had added the crime of murder to her other piratical practices, She wand sometimes permit them to get almost within gus-shot ranges, when she would brust her range within gus-shot ranges, when she would thrust her nose into the wind's eye and baffle all attempts to pursue her.
