hay fellow, living on the few that he caught and the equirrels he killed, but mostly on the donations of his neighbors "So poor Job is dead, is he!"

"No, he ain't dead, actiy," asiathey.

"No the ain't dead, actiy," asiathey.

"That is general, he has got too informal all-fred lany to live. We can't afford him any more. He's got so large that the grass began to grow over his shoos—so everteain' lany that he put out one of his ayes to save the trouble of winkin' when out argunnin.

"But," may a the general, "this must not be. It will disgrace my neighborhood. Try him a while longer, can't you I"

"Can't; too late—coffin or at $1.55.
Must go en new."

About this time—the procession cam up and haited, when the general propose d, if they would tel Job out, he would sand over a bag of cors. Ue this amnouncement the lids of the coffin openia, and Job, as he larily lay down, "go on with the funeral !" Have get's Magurine for May.
