OPENING CONSTITUENCIES.

It appears from the Mail that while Mr. Blake finds it impossible to secure constituencies for peliticians whose services he is anxious to have, "a word from Sir John would throw open twenty seats for a man whose presence in par-hament the party needed." If this be true it shows the existence of a lamentable state of affairs. It lets it be clearly seen what slaves to party our representa-tives really are, and how they come and go at the beck of the party leader. The constuents who elect representatives un-der the delusion that they are sending men to parliament to represent them, are much to be pitied. They are really send-ing men to do the bidding of the party leader, even to the surrendering of their seats when the party leader requires that this shall be done. It is all very well so far as Sir John Macdonald is concerned to know that "a word" from him "would throw open twenty seats," but it does not say much for the self-respect and inndence of those who are supposed to represent the people. - [Toronto Tele-

"If I caught a boy mine smoking I'd thrash him," said a sturdy mechanic once, in our hearing; and he puffed the smoke from his mouth with all the virtuous in-dignation imaginable. "Why would you thrash him?" we inquired, following the question by relating the street incident of a gentleman with a cigar in his mouth pointing out to his son a group of boys whom he saw smoking, remarking that it is very wrong for boys like those to smoke, to which the little fellow innocently replied, "If it's wrong for boys to smoke, isn't it worse for a man, father?" Of course it is. If with our judgment and superior knowledge we do not know any better, what can be expect from the inexperience of mere lads? They com-mence the habit in thoughtless imitation of those who are older than themselves, and who ought to be much wiser; but length of years is not always a sure indication of wisdom. Even as the future possibilities of a great tree lie mysteriously folded up in the narrow confines of a tiny seed, so, in like manner, all great truths lie in small compass. Peanut Raising in Virginia

The peanut section of Virginia comprises the counties on the south side of the James River, from Norfolk to Petersburg, those two cities being the principal markets and shipping places. Soil for peas must be loose, and requires lime; if deficient in that it must be applied Marl, which is abundant here, though difficult to get at, is an excellent substitute and often extensively used. It is scattered over the pea land, then plowed in; then the land is harrowed, ridged (ridges being two feet apart) and "dotted." A dotter is a wooden wheel, fifteen or eighteen inches in circumference, with a knob protruding; it is run over these ridges, leveling them slightly, The Hamilton Spectator says:—"It is proposed in the new penal code to give ped, being thus evenly planted at drop-ped, being thus evenly planted at drop-ped at ped, being thus evenly planted, at a pro-per distance apart. The first planting is done from the tenth to the fifteenth of May, usually, except in late seasons like this when it is later.
