LADY LAURA'S RELEASE

THE STORY OF A SPOILED BEAUTY.

CHAPTER XXI.

"I spoke three times before he heard me, and when he did start as though he had only remembered that I existed. And, Angel—I am ashamed to tell you—I am quite sure that he was holding her hand. I saw it plainly. If he loves me, as he professes, better than all the world beside, why should he sit holding another woman's hand?"

"The captain does what no one else would think of doing," said Angela. "He is not to be judged by ordinary rules, for what would be a breach of etiquette on the part of another is a privileged act when done by the captain. Besides, he has a caring manner that is natural to him."

"He looked so angry because I interrupted him," added her ladyship. "He seemed so impatient to be gone, and barely answered my question; and, Angel, when he looked at Miss Kane his eyes were full of love. Ah, my darlings, they have not the same look for me!"

Angela did her best to comfort her unhappy mother.

"Perhaps," she suggested, "they were talking about something particular, and did not wish to be interrupted."

"But I ought not to be considered an interruption," she urged. "The captain should not have anything to say to any lady which his wife might not hear."

"Perhaps it was something about one of their old acquaintances."

MOTHER! MOVE CHILD'S BOWELS

"California Fig Syrup" is Child's Best Laxative

Hurry mother! Even a sick child loves the "fruity" taste of "California Fig Syrup" and it never fails to open the bowels. A teaspoonful to-day may prevent a sick child to-morrow. If constipated, bilious, feverish, fretful, has cold, colic, or if stomach is sour, fumes coated, breath bad, remember a good cleansing of the little bowels is often all that is necessary.

Ask your druggist for genuine "California Fig Syrup" which has directions for babies and children of all ages printed on bottle. Mother! You must say "California", or you may get an imitation fig syrup.

that it would be wise to speak." "I must, Angel, for I can no longer endure the anguish of mind I am suffering. You do not know how full of pain and distress the last few weeks have been to me. See!—and her ladyship pushed down the slender bracelet of gold that encircled her wrist—"see, Angel; I am growing thin. I cannot sleep at night, while my mind is tortured with doubt and dread in the day. I dream of that girl with her dark, winning face beckoning him away from me, and he goes always. Comfort me, my dear; tell me mine are but nervous fancies. Ah, me, I know they are all hard, bitter truths! There can be no comfort for me."

"My love is a comfort," said Angela, impulsively. "It is, my darling; but it is a different thing. Do you think I undervalue it. I cannot live without the entire devotion of my husband's heart, and now I fear his love is slipping from me."

"We are going to Italy in September, mamma, and there will be no Gladys Rane there to cause you pain," said Angela, comfortingly. "Is she so much more beautiful than I am, Angel?" asked Lady Laura.

The girl looked at her mother's graceful figure, her golden hair, her white, slender neck, her blue eyes and lovely features. Could any woman be more beautiful? The dark, fascinating face of Gladys Rane rose before her.

"It is no question of more or less beauty, mamma," she replied. "You differ as a red rose from a white one. She is not one whit more fair than you."

"Then it is not by her beauty that Vance is attracted," said Lady Laura. "I—I wonder, Angel, if I were to try to be brighter, to amuse him more—I begin to see that men require a great deal of amusement—would that I win back his love!"

Angela's heart sank when she heard the simple question. She knew so well that her step-father had never loved her mother, and that now the fleeting fancy was dead, nothing her mother could do would win the love she coveted.

"You are always bright and beautiful, mamma," she said. "Any one who could not be happy and content with you deserves neither happiness nor content."

But, though she tried to speak cheerfully, Angela's heart was heavy with dread of the coming sorrow.

CHAPTER XXII.

Attached to Rood House was an old-fashioned garden; and one morning in June Captain Wynyard sat near the white syringa-trees, then in full bloom. He was complacently smoking a cigar, and the Morning Post lay carefully spread across his knees. The air was full of the scent of roses; the sun was lighting up the brilliant flowers and wealth of foliage, and the captain was in an excellent humor.

He had before him the happy prospect of spending the whole afternoon with Gladys Rane. They were all going to a garden-party at Harborport House, and he knew that among such a large company as was certain to be there he would be able to monopolize her. Supreme content was written on his handsome face as he contemplated the happiness in store for him. He had been thinking of what might have been if he had been rich enough to marry Gladys Rane, and the happiness shining in his face showed that his thoughts were no unpleasant ones.

Tells Secret Rites of Klan to Police.

New York, Feb. 4.—Secret rites of the Ku Klux Klan in Yonkers were revealed through the examination by the police of that city of John C. Updegrave, an agent of the Department of Justice in New York City, who was formerly a resident of Yonkers. Mr. Updegrave denied that he ever had been a member of the Klan, but admitted that he had made an application to become a member. His name was said to have been proposed by Wilson D. Bush of New York.

Mr. Updegrave said that the initiation fee of the Klan was $10 and that each new member received a red button, bearing the initials, "K. O. T. O. P." To outsiders this was said to stand for "Knight of the Open Palm," but its meaning to members was said to be "Klanmen Observe Their Oath Persistently."

Meetings of the Yonkers Klan were held frequently, he said, under the names of the American Society, the Turtle Club, the Owl Club and the National Civic Association. He said that it usually took twenty minutes to get into a Klavern where a Klonkave was being held, the password at the outer door being "white" and at the inner door "supremacy."

There was also another greeting, "Klotoy," a word formed from the initials of the membership button, he said, and the countersign to this was "Potok," uttered by the doorman, who reversed these letters. The secret handshake, he added, was merely with the left hand.

The eight alleged Klansmen arrested by the police a week ago in Brooklyn, were arraigned yesterday before Magistrate James J. Golden in Gates Avenue Police Court, and their hearing was adjourned until today. Contrary to expectation, their arraignment caused no crowd to gather and there were only the usual number of spectators in court.

Five Ice Ages.

It is known that, once a great sheet of ice was spread over Canada and the northern part of the United States, reaching as far south as Philadelphia and St. Louis, but the United States Geological Society has worked the problem out in much detail. As a result of its observations it says that there were really five glacial periods, the first one having started about 800,000 years ago.

Only about 20,000 years have elapsed since the last ice sheet melted. Even now it has not wholly disappeared, for it still holds its grip in northern latitudes, and remnants of it are found on lofty mountain tops.

What has happened again and again in the past may recur in the future, and there may be another advance of the ice southward. Nobody knows the cause of these phenomena, unless it be that the sun during occasional periods does not give out as much heat as usual. It has been said that if the average temperature in our latitudes through a long series of years were reduced by only ten degrees, another Age of Ice would arrive. For there would not be enough heat in the summers to melt the winter snows which thus would gradually accumulate until a sheet of snow and ice thousands of feet thick spread over all the country.
