YOUNG MEN DID NOT RESIST

Charge Laid Against Them by P. C. Garnett Not Proven in Court.

P. C. Ernest Garnett had trouble of his own when he went about arresting three young men, who broke a window in the grocery store of Edward S. English, on Adelaide street, on New Year's Day. According to Garnett's story, Joseph Murray, Edward Parker, and Benjamin Ward were acting disorderly on Adelaide street, and were under the influence of liquor. While talking one of them fell on the icy sidewalk and shoved his elbow through the window of the grocery store. Garnett testified that one of the men attempted to run away, when he blew off, and he came back. All three were taken into the station, and Garnett testified that they were all under arrest, after carefully closing the door and bracing himself bravely and firmly against it.

He then asked a lady who was in the store to telephone for the patrol, but was caught by the officers who called on Mr. English in the name of the King to assist him in making the arrest. Mr. English also refused to do this, it was alleged, although threatened with a penalty of a $200 fine for refusing to assist the police.

Then the other two came back, and, according to Garnett's evidence, attempted to escape. Garnett testified that he was caught by the officers who called on Mr. English in the name of the King to assist him in making the arrest. Mr. English also refused to do this, it was alleged, although threatened with a penalty of a $200 fine for refusing to assist the police.
