WELFARE WORKERS GET $70,000 IN DRIVE TO DATE; $55,000 MORE IS NEEDED

Meaneast Firm in London Found by R. W. Harwick's Team Today.

MALL GIVERS NOW
Enthusiasm Intense as Workers Feel Objective Will Be Realized.

Two days to go, and $55,000 to get. Poor, friendless London asks for money, friendly London asks for help in their time of need—they ask in the name of humanity.

Will prosperous London make the grade? The spirit actuating every welfare worker today is the spirit of "we shall not fail." But all the spirit and determination in the world will not suffice if those who have not yet given and respond generously and freely within the next two days.

London cannot fail—she must not. This morning a little band of welfare workers started out with grim resolve to collect $50,000 before Saturday night. If they do not, then tremendous burden falls on the shoulders of the welfare workers who are making a week-end clean-up.

Only untold liberality on the part of citizens who have not yet been approached will make it possible to realize the $125,000 objective.

The Meaneast Firm.
There are a few people—very few whose refusal to share the responsibility of caring for the destitute adds an added burden on those who are in the light. The following tale of meaneast firm in town illustrates.

The welfare team captained by R. W. Harwick this morning, however, made the find. While soliciting for the fund, the team entered a small shop and asked for a description.

The proprietor refused. He would give a red penny. About an hour later members of the team were passing one of the residential districts. At one house a young woman answered the door. Welfare men made known their quest.

The young woman's lips quivered. "I'm sorry," she said, "but I can't give anything this year." Then she told the team that last year she was employed by the meaneast firm in town—the same that refused to give a red penny.

She said she was employed by the meaneast firm in town—the same that refused to give a red penny. She said she was employed by the meaneast firm in town—the same that refused to give a red penny.

approached the owner of the store and asked him to contribute. He refused, and the undiplomatic canvasser said, "You refuse to give us $10—a week's salary. I don't think much of you."

As a result of the canvasser's remark the young woman, on coming to her work that afternoon was distressed.

MAYOR INCLINED TO GO ON "STUMP" AGAINST DRURY

"If I Only Had Three Months' Time I'd Do It," He Declares.

ALDERMEN ANGRY
Defeat of the MacBride Bill for Elective Police Commission Sends Them on Warpath.

"It's time for a change in our provincial administration, and it's time we sent a fighter out of London to Toronto."

So declared Mayor George A. Wenige today as he scanned the report that the "elective police commission" project—the MacBride bill—went down to defeat last night.

"The Drury government is not a government in the proper sense of the word," reasons the mayor, adding that if he had three months' time he would be inclined to "take the stump" through the province in the interests of the opposition.

"What is the meaning of the word 'government'?" questions Mayor Wenige. "It seems to me that a government is there to abide by the wishes of the majority of the citizens of the electorate."

"Here we see the government according to the demands of those who are our paid employees, the police chiefs and crown attorneys."

"And Premier Drury actually declined to listen to a deputation from 13 cities, or, in other words, refuses to hear 900,000 people. I maintain that it is time for a change."

Mayor Wenige announced today that he is not through by any means. There are other avenues of approach. "We'll now endeavor to inaugurate the commission form of municipal government," he declared vigorously.

And Premier Drury, who vote without complete knowledge of the situation.

The chairman of the board of works voiced complete surprise to learn also that Premier Drury had refused to hear the deputation.

"If that is so, I think he was very unfair," he said. "He should not hear but one side of the question and a biased view as it must be, coming from the attorney-general. I thought Premier Drury was a bigger man than that."

Sees Raney's Downfall.
"Well, we pretty near know what the Premier Drury," commented Ald. John Colbert, one of Labor's representatives in the council. "And he did not want to see the deputation from the several cities. Now the deputations won't want to see him."

"Attorney-General Raney stated that these would be any elective police commission as long as he was attorney-general. Well, he may not be in that position very long. If that is the way they are treating the representatives in 13 cities, it looks rather bad. You couldn't expect anything from Mr. Raney, but I did think that the premier would hear us again."

Ald. Colbert inquired from The Advertiser if there had been any further word from Mr. Raney relative to the council's power to revise police commission estimates. The reply was in the negative.

"No, and we're not likely to either," advised Ald. Colbert. He explained further that the members of the Canadian Labor Party had not yet considered whether the party would retain its affiliation with the U. P. O. forces during the coming campaign.

He hinted at the advisability of a change, but appeared unwilling that they should return to the fold of either of the old-line parties.

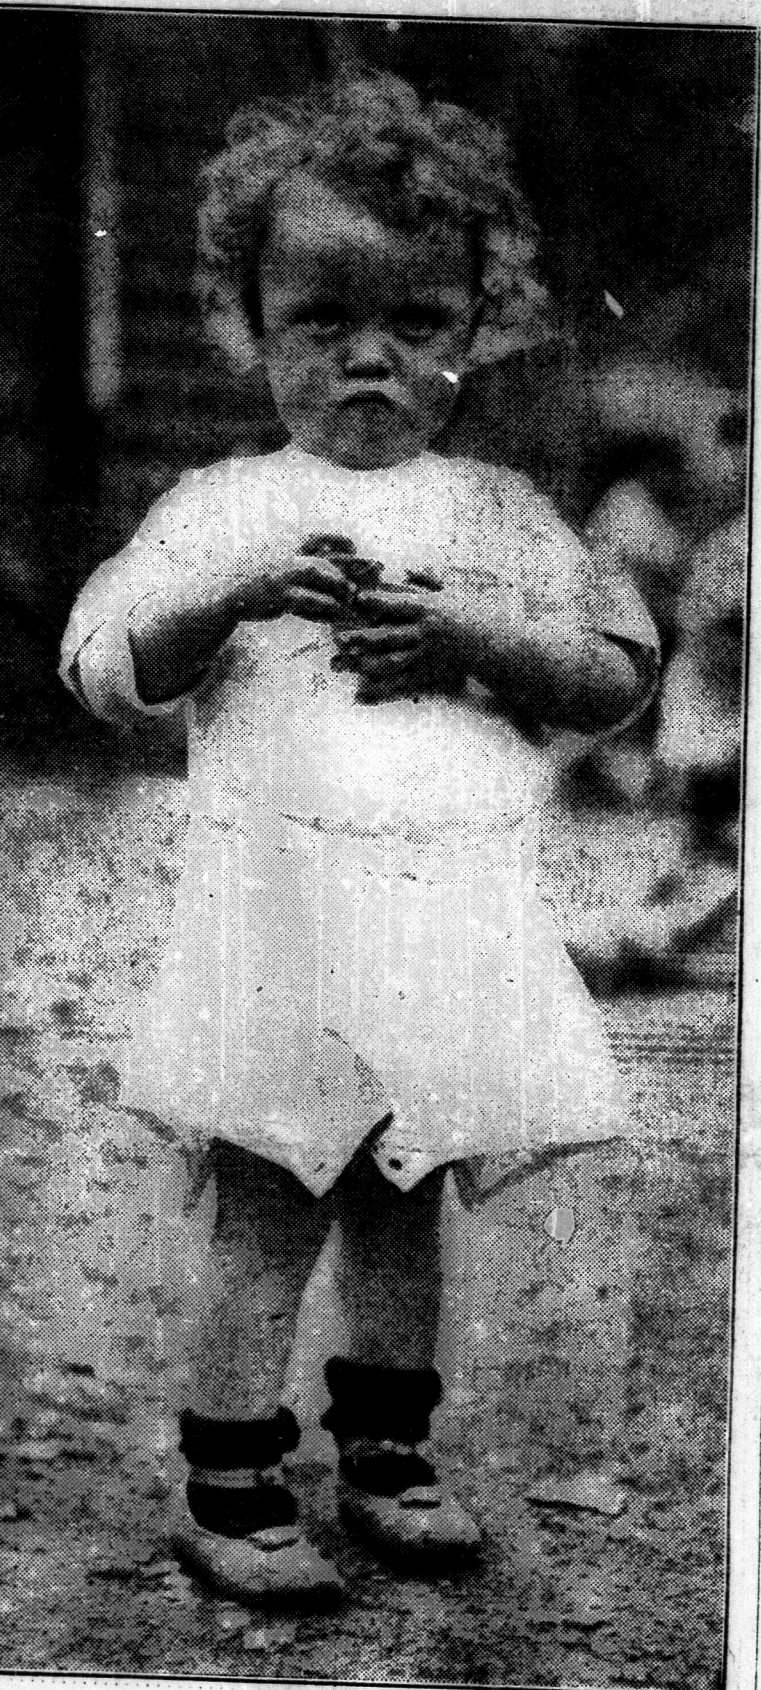

CANADA SENDING IN STOCK WORRIES BRITISH FARMER

Associated Press Despatch.
London, April 5.—The British farmer is very much perturbed at the idea of the ministry of agriculture seeking to aid the Dominion farmers in sending breeding cattle to Great Britain, according to the agriculture correspondent of the Telegraph. "Great Britain is the stud farm of the world," the British farmer says.

The Telegraph's agriculture correspondent says the British farmer takes the stand that quality among the cattle of the dominions can be retained only by the breeders returning to Britain every few years for the purpose of purchasing high-class bulls and of cows of unalloyed lineage.

He's Looking At You—"Won't You Help Me?"

What Is Your Answer? All London Is Working For the Welfare Drive—Have You Done Your Share?

London has a big job on her hands this week. She has to make provision for all the needy members of her family.

She needs $125,000. If she fails, there are little children, like the lad above, and sick people, and aged and homeless, who cannot be cared for.

What is London? London is simply a label for a great number of people living together with community interests.

You are London. The man next door is London, and all the people on your street.

You are able to live, because you make things to sell to your neighbor, and he lives because he makes something to sell to you. The Welfare Drive is, therefore, your job—your responsibility and your privilege, because you are part of London.

You prosecute in your police court people who abuse and neglect dumb animals.

A homeless, hungry dog rouses your pity. And rightly so.

But what about your neighbors who are in want? What about abused and neglected children? What about the aged, who are nameless and hungry unless someone cares? Your job!

Unless You Do Your Share the Welfare Drive Will Fail—Show That You Care—Give Today!

SIR MICHAEL SADLER TO SPEAK IN LONDON
Sir Michael Sadler, the distinguished Britisher who is at present in Toronto, is coming to London next Tuesday as the guest of the Canadian Club.

Sir Michael will deliver an address at a special luncheon of the club on Tuesday.

BADEN-POWELL'S NOTED WIFE NOW IN CITY OF LONDON

Comes To Attend Large Girl Guide Rally in Armories Today.

NEEDS "BALANCE"
Distinguished Visitor Gives Her Opinion as to What Modern Girl Lacks.

"What does the girl of today most need? Balance," said Lady Baden-Powell, founder of the Girl Guide movement, without a moment's hesitation when asked the question today just after her arrival in London, the provincial headquarters.

A woman above middle height, well developed, straight as a soldier on parade, with laughing dark eyes, and a flashing, friendly smile, she looked the ideal leader for girls, ready to enter into and understand their joys, their sorrows and their problems, to be their counselor and good pal.

"The girl of today," she continued, "needs guiding. No girl who is high-spirited, whole-hearted, and full of the joy of achievement, is going to make a fool of herself, exactly. But there is danger of her splendid energies being wasted unless these are directed in the right channels. She has much more self-reliance than her sister of a generation or so ago. She is independent, and there is no denying it, the child of today is a bit out of hand. It's the spirit of the age."

That is why I feel the guide movement is such an immensely important one. It affords so many wholesome outlets for activities, provides so many interests, supplies the romance dear to the heart of every girl, that it is a tremendously important thing to build up in the girls a sense of responsibility towards others, and that is what the guide movement is doing. One of the fine things about it is that it is giving the girls an appreciation of fine things other people are doing."

Plauds for Support.
"Because the guide movement gives leadership to girls and trains them for responsibilities as leaders themselves, it is tremendously important that it should have backing by the public."

The people who know and understand it are enthusiastic backers, parents, preachers, the school authorities. "Another point I'd like to impress in Canada is the fact that the Guide movement is a British organization. The program, tried out over a period of ten years, has demonstrated that it is practical, and adapted for the needs of the girl of today—the girl who is going to grow up to be a fine citizen, no matter what some people may be saying about her."

"I was over in Canada in 1910 with my husband, Sir Robert Baden-Powell, and I have been delighted on this trip to find the marked growth in interest. Mrs. H. D. Warren, the Dominion commissioner, who is with me today, is doing a wonderful work, and I'd like you to say so for me. She deserves every credit. I've only been in Canada five days this time, but I assure you I have had my eyes wide open. Canada is this kind of weather. I love it. Love it all the time."

Greets Visitor.
At this point, Mrs. Shuttleworth, King arrived, wife of the G. O. C. Turn to Page 4, Column 4.

SALARY LIST REFUSAL LEADS TO HOT SESSION OF L. & P. S. COMMISSION

Ends in Disorder After Mayor Wenige Threatens To Have Council, in Special Meeting Tomorrow, Rescind Bylaw Appointing Members of London and Port Stanley Railway Board.

SIR ADAM BECK AND MAYOR CROSS SWORDS

Mayor George Wenige proposes to stage a special meeting of the city council tomorrow to rescind the municipal bylaw appointing Sir Adam Beck, Percy Moore and Frank Harley as members of the London and Port Stanley Railway Commission.

At a special session of the commission this morning, which terminated in disorder of the verbal variety, the railway's salary list, was rejected by a vote of 3-2.

Commissioner Donald Wright, representing on the commission, supported the mayor throughout the hottest contest staged at the city hall in many years.

"I don't mind telling you, Sir Adam," declared Mayor Wenige, at the meeting dispersed, "that at a special session of the city council tomorrow I propose to move that our bylaw appointing the members of this board be rescinded. You are appointees of the council, and twelve members who passed this resolution are not going to be ignored in this manner."

Heated Discussion.
"You have misrepresented us," retorted Sir Adam, hotly, as he struggled with his hat and coat. "We are not refusing to give this salary list to you or the members of the council for your own personal gain."

"You are defeating your resolution," shot back the mayor. "And what is more, I object to your claim 'that as mayor of this city I am misrepresenting the facts.'"

"I say that you are—," commented the hydro knight again. "I don't want to talk to you any more, if you persist with language such as you have used throughout this meeting, and your remarks about politics interfering with hydro and publicly-owned enterprises."

The debate was carried on into the hall, and the uplifted voices of the two opponents resounded throughout the hydro building.

"Salary List" Squabble.
The "salary list" squabble developed into a verbal engagement of the two opponents, which was broken by the chairman of the hydro and electric commission and the mayor.

RESERVES JUDGMENT IN BROTHER-SISTER CASE
Plaintiff Wishes To Prevent Relative Living in House.

His Honor Talbot Macbeth reserved judgment this morning in the Morison-Morkin case that has claimed the attention of the county court for the past two days.

The plaintiff, John Morkin of 171 St. George street, entered action against his sister Margaret to prevent her from making her home in what he states is his house. In the counter claim the defendant declared that under the provisions of her mother's will she is entitled to a home at 171 George street, and asks for damages for large being allowed to live there for two years.

M. P. McDonagh is acting for the plaintiff and Ivey Elliott, Weir and Gillanders for the defendant.

SAY LADY NORTHCLIFFE GAVE UP HUGE FORTUNE

Associated Press Despatch.
London, April 5.—The newspapers assert that Lady Northcliffe, by marrying Sir Robert Arundel Hudson, relinquishes a large fortune; however, there are no estimates as to the amount. It is recalled that under the will of the publisher's wife, the widow was given an annuity of 35 per cent of the residuary trust "during her widowhood." Lady Northcliffe has possession of two country houses and the viscount gave her before his death.

News of yesterday's wedding at Harebury castle as a complete surprise to everyone except a few intimates. Lady Northcliffe and Sir Robert had long been intimate, and were closely associated in war work, especially in the organization of a private hospital for sick and wounded soldiers. Sir Robert and Lady Northcliffe were also close friends.
