

I N D E X.

of their councils: their orators, ii. 26, 27. Of the government of villages; its defects; their causes, ii. 29. Of their sensibility of the point of honour, ii. 36. Care of the young Indians in adorning themselves, ii. 40, 41. Indian fable about lake Superior, ii. 44, 45. Their traditions about Michillimakinac, ii. 45. Their Marriages, ii. 48, &c. Jealousy of the Indians, ii. 50. Of the imposing this name amongst them: remarks upon it, ii. 55, 56. The Indians of the bay dance the Calumet, ii. 67. Superstition of the Indians bordering on the bay, ii. 73, 74. Different nations to the northward and the westward of Canada, ii. 74, 75.

Indians of Canada; their personal appearance; their strength; their vices, ii. 78, 79. Why they do not encrease; advantages they have over us, ii. 80, 81. Their eloquence, ii. 83. Their memory, penetration, and judgment, ii. 83, 84. Their greatness of soul, ii. 84. Their constancy under pain; their valour, ii. 84, &c. Their regard for one another, ii. 86, 87. Their fierceness and other faults; of the qualities of the heart, ii. 87, 88. Instances of the little natural affection children have for their parents; particular societies amongst them, ii. 89, 90. Of their colour; why they have no hair on their bodies, ii. 90, 91. Their secrecy with respect to the simples and mines of their country, ii. 101. Dreadful consequences of drunkenness amongst them, ii. 105, 106. Their happiness, ii. 107. Contempt of our manner of life, ii. 108. Care the Indian mothers take of their children; ridiculous shapes which some of them give them, ii. 109, &c. What strengthens and renders them so well made; their first exercises and the emulations amongst them, ii. 114. To what the education given them may be reduced to, ii. 114, 115. Their passions, ii. 115. Their dress, ii. 116, 117. In what manner they prick their whole bodies, ii. 118. How and for what purpose they paint their faces, ii. 119. Ornaments of the men, of the women, ii. 119, 120. Their occupations; of the culture of the land; of seed-time and harvest, ii. 121, 122. Of the different grains and pulse they cultivate, of their manner of dressing them; of their other victuals, ii. 123, 124. Labours of the men