

the limits of these pages will allow. The names of Christian and Matthew Stach, John Beck, Christian David, and Frederic Boehnish are among the "honourables," and ought not to be forgotten. They laid the foundations of that extensive work among the inhabitants of these Polar regions, which the Brethren have continued to prosecute ever since. What the Methodists have been in Fiji, so the Moravians have been to Greenland and the neighbouring countries.

Perhaps now-a-days we are apt to overlook our obligations to that devout, inoffensive, and yet spiritually aggressive people, from whom indirectly sprang some of the famous revivals of our time. Stimulated by persecution, and cleansed by suffering, they have passed on the fiery Cross of unswerving loyalty to Christ and the teaching of Holy Scripture.

I cannot sufficiently acknowledge the courtesy with which the archives of the Moravian Society have been placed at my disposal in preparing this work.

Now, gentle reader, I put my little book into your hand, trusting that God may graciously use it to your profit and His everlasting praise.
