Tragedy in a French Village.

That Old World tragedy in which the N. lagues and Capulets played a prominent part has been revived in real life, the scene being laid in a French village. At Riotard, in the Department of the Loire, lived two families—the Celettes and the Balandrands—all the male members of which were at daggers drawn with each other. When they met at local fairs they sometimes had a regular Donnybrook day, and neither Mayor, priest, nor schoolmaster could effect a reconciliation between the two rival clans. Suddenly, however, a young Balandrand fell in love with Catharine Celette, whom he met at a rustic ball. The lovers after this arranged secret meetings, and continued for some time to see one another. The affair came to the ear of old Celette, who, with his two sons, Francois and Jean-Baptiste, waylaid young Balandrand one night, murdered him, and threw his body into the pond. Celette's son-in-law kept watch while the crime was being perpetrated, but a countryman called Bergeron heard Balandrand's cries for help and saw his two aggressors throw him into the water. Bergeron also overheard one of the Celettes tell his father not to spare the victim, while he was sure that old Celette cried out when throwing the body into the pond, "There, go and have a drink!" Fearing for his own life Bergeron remained silent for several months, but he at last decided to inform the gendarmes. The Celettes have been tried at the Loire Assizes, the father and his eldest son having been each sentenced to seven years' penal servitude. The other son and his brother-in-law have been individually sent to prison for two years.

Mr. T. C. Berchard, public school teacher, Norland, writes: "During the fall of 1881 I was much troubled with Biliousness and Dyspepsia, and part of the time was unable to attend to the duties of my profession. Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery and Dyspeptic Cure was recommended to me, and I have much pleasure in stating that I was entirely cured by using one bottle. I have not had an attack of my old complaint since, and have gained fifteen pounds in weight."
