

A PLEA FOR UNITY

JUSTIN MCCARTHY'S VIEWS ON THE HOME RULE QUESTION.

THE BELIEF THAT THE ISSUE WILL YET BE FORCED THROUGH THE HOUSE OF LORDS—THE NECESSITY FOR UNITED ACTION BY THE IRISH PEOPLE—THE EVILS OF FACIOUS DISSENSIONS—THE MAJORITY MUST RULE.

Justin McCarthy, M.P., the distinguished leader of the Irish Parliamentary party, was recently entertained at a banquet at Bristol, Eng., by the local branch of the National League.

We have worked with them always, at least for many years back, since we became a recognized party, but I may say this furthermore, that there is a time that we all remember when the great bulk of English Liberals were against us.

Now, how do I define factious dissension? I think I should make the definition clear to everyone who listens to me now.

That, therefore, I hold to be faction when the minority refuses to agree with the decision of the majority.

which seemed so wild and so outrageous did good both to Ireland and to England; that it aroused attention which otherwise would have slumbered; that it put us in a fair way of a remedy for our grievances, and put Englishmen by our help in the way of remedying their grievances.

Henry Grattan, who, in speaking of a condition of things something the same, warned his countrymen against being led away by the mere feeling of gratitude for past services, and he used these memorable words: "No man must be grateful at the expense of his honesty, or woman of her honor, or nation of its liberty."

I admit all the difficulties, the reverses, the struggles; I admit that the prospect for the next few years is gloomy and dismal, but I seize upon the actual facts, and I ask any man in this room who knows anything of politics whether he can tell me of any great public measure which passed the House of Commons by a considerable majority and which was not sooner or later passed into legislation.

THE TEMPORARY DELAY in the passing of home rule. It will come—we have secured that. It is now the cause of the English Liberal party and of the English democracy.

subject whatever as there is in Ireland on the question of home rule. I say that challenge of mine could not be taken up. Remember, in Ireland we did not lose in the struggle of the late general election.

FACTIOUS DISSENSION. Now, how do I define factious dissension? I think I should make the definition clear to everyone who listens to me now.

THE MODERN COMBAT. WALTER LECKY ON THE PART PRIESTS MUST TAKE IN IT.

IRISH PATRIOT AND ORATOR. Henry Grattan, who, in speaking of a condition of things something the same, warned his countrymen against being led away by the mere feeling of gratitude for past services, and he used these memorable words: "No man must be grateful at the expense of his honesty, or woman of her honor, or nation of its liberty."

DRIVE THE TORIES OUT OF OFFICE the moment the session reopens, but we have waited a long time in hope for the success of our National cause, and what should we be worth if we could not wait for two or three or four years longer?

Another point is that the coming priest, in these great seminaries, will be taught to combat with modern errors, and not to spend years on old isms that

Scotland or of Wales, so much as it depends on the emphatic utterance of the Irish people everywhere in showing that they are determined to enforce the principle that there shall be one solid and united Irish party.

What we want is professors who are of the age to turn out priests, who will in fascinating English present the traditionally taught philosophy and theology of the Catholic schools, the surest refutation of modern error.
