

A competitor in "a handstand game" balances his body on two hands then throws one hand up in an attempt to touch a piece of leather suspended from a string above him. The leather is lifted higher and higher until a winner is declared.

Medals given to winners in the Arctic Winter Games show the Games' emblem, three rings tied with a love knot, representing the three areas above the 60th Parallel from where contestants come.

A 30-foot whip is used in the Eskimo sport of ipirautaqturniq to flick tin cans from a snowbank.