

to other States, 139, 140; his office labors, 140; his compensation, 141; his unselfishness, 141-144; receives partial payment for money expended in behalf of the State, 143, 144; and the Mass. Normal schools, 150-153, 160, 161; reports of, to the Board of Education, 162-180;—general diffusion of his reports, 162, 163; general character of his reports, 163; the First Report, 164, 165; Second Report, 165, 166; Third Report, 166, 167; Fourth Report, 167, 168; Fifth Report, 168, 169; Sixth Report, 169, 170; Seventh Report (on European schools), 170-174; Eighth Report, 174, 175; Ninth Report, 175, 176; Tenth Report, 176, 177; Eleventh Report, 178; Twelfth Report, 178, 179; spirit in which he accepted the secretaryship, 179; controversy with Boston schoolmasters, 181-209;—offence given to Boston schoolmasters by Seventh Report, 184; attack on, by schoolmasters in Remarks, 185-193; Reply of, to schoolmasters, 193-197; second attack of schoolmasters on, in Rejoinder, 197; Answer of, to Rejoinder, 198; close of the controversy with, 199; letters of, relating to controversy, 201, 202; objectionable passages in contributions to, 201-208; opposed to "prize system," 204; difficulties encountered by, 195-197; controversy of, with religious sectaries, 210-232;—attack on by N. Y. Observer and other critics, 214, 215; attack on by Mr. E. A. Newton in Christian Witness, 215-218; three letters of, in reply to attacks, 218-220; attacked by Rev. M. H. Smith, 220, 221; reply of, to M. H. Smith, 222-225; appeal of, to advocates of doctrinal teaching in schools, 225-228; letters of, to George Combe, relating to religious controversy, 228, 229; defended by Governor Briggs, Rev. Mr. Davis, and Dr. Humphrey, 229-230; aim of, to establish the status of religion in the State schools, 230-232; a member of Congress, 232-241;—elected to succeed John Quincy Adams, 233; reasons for accepting office, 234, 235; unable to promote education as a member of Congress, 235; cultivates old enthusiasms, 235; defends Drayton and Sayers, 237; political opinions of, 237, 238; opposition to slavery, 237, 238; attack of, on Daniel Webster, 238; re-election in 1850, 240; candidate for governor of Mass., 240, 241; eulogies on, 240, 241; president of Antioch College, 242-264;—elected president, 243, 244; reasons for accepting the office, 244, 245; view of, of the Mississippi valley, 246, 247; inaugural address, 247, 251; old ideas of, appear in course of study, 252; practises his old convictions about incentives, 254; views of college discipline and moral training, 254, 255; holds that a college diploma should be a certificate of character, 255; spirit of the administration of, 255, 256; educational work in the West, 257; as a teacher, 257-259; desire of, to live, 259, 260; disappointments and trials of, 260-264; failing health, 264; death of, 265; Charles Sumner on, 265, 266; statue of, in front of Boston State House, 266; character and work, 267-281;—his mind of a practical cast, 267, 268; his moral enthusiasm, 269; an opportunist, 270, 271; deficient in humor, 271; character of his contribution to educational progress, 271, 272; limitations of, 272, 273; positive contributions to pedagogy, 273, 274; greatest services to education, 274-276; influence of, in Mass., 276-278; influence of, in other States, 278;