corner of Queen and River-streets, yesterday afternoon. The address was under the auspices of the Round Table

Club.

Mrs. Ward's view, after earnest study of playgrounds, was that an unsupervised playground was worse than the condition of having no playground at all, the children failing to obtain the benefit from their pastimes when not well organized. The inferiority of such playgrounds was strikingly manifested in New York, where the novelist had seen a supervised and unsupervised playground side by side.

Mrs. Ward devoted much attention to the work of the Passmore-Edwards Mrs. Ward devoted much attention to the work of the Passmore-Edwards settlement in London, Eng. The schools in the district were attended by children of indigent parents, and it was desirable to keep them as much as possible away from the home life with its debasing influences. Accordingly manual training classes were formed and from 4.30 p.m. the hour of school dismissal, until 8 p.m., the pupils were given instructions in wholesome and interesting pursuits. The children were very anxious to The children were very anxious to become members of these classes, and as the privilege of joining them depended upon proficiency in school work
