COUCY-LE-CHATEAU FALLS TO FRENCH

With the French Armies Advancing from Soissons, March 27.—French soldiers don't pull down the carcases of rabbits, crows, hawks, squirrels and the like which they find occasionally strung on wires dangling from ruins of houses destroyed by the Germans in their retreat.

Here is the reason why: In several places north of Soissons the advancing French forces have found that when an attempt was made to yank down these dead bodies the pull on the wires to which they were attached set off mines ingeniously laid by the Germans.

It is a commentary on the German military character that, faced by hot pursuit along the Maubeuge road and forced to choose between what they could destroy and what they did not have to destroy the Germans choose to destroy orchards and leave infact concrete shelters of the utmost military value.
