Now this, which sounds strange and dangerous to some people is simply the attitude of Christ. He was continually denouncing the Pharisees and scribes, who were theologically sound, because they loved neither God nor man. But we find him highly commending the Roman centurians, poor heather women, Samaritan heretics and the like, when they displayed the right spirit.

I would say to such a one: "In so far as you strive to act up to any one cardinal point in the teaching of Christ, so far you are a follower of Christ.

"Second Christianity is not a doctrine of the about man. It is the doctrine of the brotherhood of man. Ah, yes, you say, here is something that I can understand with all my heart. Yes, but remember it was Christianity that brought to light that doctrine. Its million and a half people are half as many as were in all of the thirten colonies when independence was secured; and even now its population is greater than twenty-three of the other states, so that, as Frederick J. Haskins remarks in the Philadelphia Press, Oklahoma begins its career half-way up the ladder.

A MIXED POPULATION.

Of Oklahoma great things are expected on account of its blood and its agricultural possibilities. The two great American aristocracies, the Southerns and the Cherokee Indians—have united to form the basis of its population, and the badf man and women from every European country. Those who, like Mr. Haskins, see in this human mongrelization one of the secrets of the power and wealth of the United States, have reason to believe that Oklahoma will produce a larger number of typical Americans than any other state. What New York is to the states; for standing in one dorway in a little Oklahoma is the bimbad on and at the buffalo and the badf man to the limbo of things that were and are not.

Oklahoma until 1889, was a land of romance. There the cowboy, the gunfighter, the Indian and the buffalo made their last stand against the advancing tide of agriculture. When the land was thrown open to settlement, the farms swept the ranches out of existence, and for some years they have been about as scarce in Oklahoma as in Ontario. THE CONSTITUTION.

The constitution was prepared and for warded to Washington, where President Roosevelt, after reading it, declared that his opinion wasn't fit to print. Mr. Bryce the British Ambassador on the contrary, was warm in his praise of the instrument, and the clash in the two distinguished opinions threatened to create an unpleasion of the admiration of all who came in contact with single the people ratified it by twice the majority the gave to the Denth Washington, where the features of the constitution of the concratic ticket.
