Grandma's Courting Days.

"Then he really did consent at last?" said Emmeline.

"Yes," replied grandma. "There really wasn't anything else for him to do, I said: 'Dear father, Mr. Hackerley inspires me with sentiments of the most profound respect; I esteem him most highly, but I do not love him, and it grieves me to the heart that you should consider me undutiful. On the other hand, if you insist upon my marrying, I must, as your daughter, obey you, but I shall be most unhappy, believe me.'"

"Were you joking, grandma?" asked Vivien.

Grandma looked at her rather severely. "Why should you ask that question?" she inquired.

Emmeline gave her sister a surreptitious pinch. "I-I-I thought that perhaps you weren't really in earnest," explained Vivien.

"Indeed I was," said grandma smoothing her skirt. "Very much in earnest. I could not, even to please my dearest father, contract a matrimonial alliance with a gentleman 40 years my senior. William contrived to send me a billet urging a clandestine meeting, but that, of course, I denied him."

"Why?" asked Vivien.

"I am surprised that you should ask that question, my dear," said grandma. "Why, such a meeting would have been highly improper."

"Still, I do not believe that my father would have abated his determination had it not been for the intervention of Mr. Hackerley himself, who, with a chivalry and kindness that was far beyond our expectations, resigned his pretensions and actually pleaded William's cause."

"How perfectly sweet and lovely of him!" exclaimed Emmeline.

"Wasn't he just noble!" said Vivien.

"After you had turned him down to do that, grandma, you wouldn't mind if I ask you, will you, but did you call him William--when you were together, you know?"

"Certainly not," replied grandma. "Not before we were formally affianced, at least, I called him Mr. Tompwin."

"How funny!" remarked Vivien, quite frankly.

Emmeline giggled a little, and then begged her grandmother to go on. "I'm just crazy to hear you tell me all about it," she said.

"There is nothing more to relate," said grandma. "When dear father had given his consent and our betrothal had taken place, we were, of course, permitted to see each other with comparative freedom. William was invited to dine with us every Sabbath and on any social occasion, such as a ball, or when my mother and I attended the play, he was allowed the privilege of escorting us."

"Gee!" exclaimed Emmeline, unguardedly and with fervor.

"Emmeline, you shock me," said her grandmother, reprovingly.

"I didn't mean anything by it and Tom says it so often that I say it without thinking," said the girl. "Please don't mind me. How long were you engaged, grandma?"

"For two years," replied grandma. "Father and mother considered that we should both have time to acquaint ourselves with each other's dispositions before taking the irrevocable step of marriage."

"Didn't they have divorces then?" asked Vivien.

"I presume that, then, as now, there were divorces, but there was not then the laxity of opinion concerning them that unhappily prevails at this day and age," replied grandma. "Furthermore, well-conducted young women would not even have mentioned such a subject."

"Go on, dear grandma," urged Emmeline. They wanted to give you a chance to know each other thoroughly, so they allowed you to see each other once a week and sometimes even oftener?"

"Yes," said grandma, seriously, "and if parents were equally wise nowadays we should hear of fewer hasty and ill-considered unions. I tell you there is nothing more. We were married on the eighteenth of June, 1856."

"What did you wear?" asked Emmeline, with interest.

"Get me those daguerreotypes out of the top drawer in the highboy," grand-

DOCTORS USING PATENT MEDICINES

The Hon. the Minister is anxious to cure and save the best available Remedies.

The discussion of the bill now before the Dominion Parliament for the regulation of the manufacture and sale of patent or proprietary medicines is one of the utmost importance, and is receiving a great deal of attention, not only by the proprietary medicine manufacturers, but also by the retail and wholesale druggists. Every manufacturer of reliable and high class remedies welcomes the bill as a step in the right direction. The discussion has brought out the fact that the best physicians in Canada and on the continent approve of and prescribe Paychone in cases of the most difficult character. In a recent instance of very serious throat and lung trouble the patient had been using Paychone. Two leading United States specialists were consulted, in addition to two eminent Canadian physicians. Upon learning what the patient was using, a sample of Paychone was taken and analyzed, with the result that the physicians advised its continuance. They prescribed no other medicine but Paychone, with the result that the patient has fully recovered and is a splendid walking and talking advertisement for the wonderful curative power of a remedy that will "stand up" before the keenest professional critics and analyze as a builder up of the system and restoring all wasted conditions. Paychone has no equal and the best and most earnest physicians recognize this fact. "At the age of 35 my lungs were in a terrible state. I had in grips the year before; it settled on my lungs and I kept steadily growing worse till I got down so low I was in bed for six weeks. I had a consultation of doctors, and they said they could do nothing more for me. Then I started to use Paychone. I took the medicine for more than a year. It certainly did wonders for me. I am now as strong as I was before my sickness."

Paychone, pronounced St. John, is the greatest tonic, building up the system, increasing the appetite, purifying the blood, its direct action being directly upon the throat and lungs, giving tone and vigor to the entire system. ma directed. "There," she said, opening one of the faded red square cases. "That was taken a month after our wedding. I wore that dress to a ball the evening of the day that I heard Mr. Lincoln make a speech in favor of Mr. Fremont. Your grandfather was very indignant at some of the arguments Mr. Lincoln advanced. At that time he was a strong Buchanan man himself, and--"

"Just see that crinoline!" interrupted Vivien. "Oh, if they ever do bring them back I'll die! Why did you wear that funny looking thing across your forehead, grandma?"

"The fillet? Those were worn then."

"I think, Vivien, that if your hair--"

"I think they are awfully becoming," Emmeline hastened to say. "What color is that dress, grandma? It's a sort of pink, isn't it?"

"Salmon pink," replied the old lady. "It was silk. I'll show it to you some day. Here's your grandfather. We were taken at the same time."

"Was his coat as blue as that?" asked Emmeline.

"Bluer than that," said grandma. "The picture is faded."

"Aloe coat and yellow trousers?" gasped Emmeline.

"But, my dear," corrected the grandmother, "they were nanken. He always wore nanken on those days. That waist-coat he is wearing was embroidered by hand. Some of the embroidery was in gold thread--pure gold. It was handsome. Now, put them back. I'm going to take my nap and I'm tired of your chatter."

"Dear, funny old things," said Emmeline. Did you ever hear anything so ridiculous? Can you imagine them?"

"And think of falling in love with a girl with hair arranged like that and in a salmon-pink silk over a hoop skirt! How could he?"

"How could she? That necktie sticking out on each side of him! And Vivien, his coat sleeves were down over his knuckles. The coat doesn't fit, to say nothing of the color. And that hat on the table by him! Do you honestly believe they ever did--really?"

"Eh," said Vivien, suddenly, "I'm going to call in every one of my photographs and burn them!"--Chicago News.

A Trout Story.

Most travellers carry medals for telling fish stories, but here is one which is a little off the common run. We were camping in the north, says a man of the road, and one evening after our supper of black bass and bacon we lay under the pine trees smoking and telling fish stories in which it was always the "bigger bass" that got away. The guide listened with the gravity of a man who knew all about fish stories, and finally he knocked the ashes from his pipe and told us a fish story. "Once long ago," he said, "there was a terrible big trout up in Smith's pool. Every fellow who fished in the pool had hooked him one time or other, but he always got away, bit off the snood or something. I tried to catch him myself a dozen times. One day I was sitting by the pool, when splash, a young robin fluttered out of a nest on a limb above the pool into the water below. In a minute there was a rush, a gleam of yellow, and the old trout had thrown himself clean out of the water, and I had swallowed the robin whole. What did I do? Well, I climbed that tree in short order. Got another one of those young robins, baited my hook with it, and threw it in just as lightly as I could. In a minute there was another rush, another gleam of yellow, and again the old trout jumped clear of the water as he swallowed the robin, and in a minute I had him hooked. It was lucky I wasn't fishing with any of this new-fangled rigging these boys use, and that I wasn't bothered with a reel to look after, or I would have lost him sure. As it was it took me a devil of a time to get him out. Good to eat? Great Scott! We didn't try to eat him. He was so full of hooks we sold him for old iron, you know." That ended our fish stories for that night.
