If you have any old copies of the Gazette, take a look through them.

Notice anything about it that struck you as odd? Before you begin looking, how about a hint: no science-related articles.

Starting next week, the Dalhousie Gazette will have a new science section. Look for future coverage of what the school's various science departments are working on, other than teaching their respected disciplines. In addition to the science scene at Dal, coverage will also focus on events, discoveries, and breakthroughs in the scientific community, and stories with a connection to the work going on locally.

Other weekly features will include a section featuring condensed items of relevant science stories with a local interest culled from Dalhousie science departments.

Anyone who would like to learn more about this new section, or knows of something they would like to see covered in the Gazette's new science section is encouraged to contact the Gazette or drop by at room 312 in the SUB.
