A few days ago the marriage of Miss Edlo Ramage, the English girl wno, as a child, posed for the artist Millais, and who was the original of his famous picture, "Cherry Ripe," was celebrated the other day. There was a children's fancy ball given by the manager of the Graphic, and the belle of the party was gen-erally considered to be Edle, the tuny daughter of Mrs. Ramage, who has so successfully arranged ker costums after the picture of Penelope Boothby, by Sir Joshua Reynolds, and who, doubtless, inherited her artistic taste from her father, the well-known artist, George H. Thomas. Edle was taken the next morning to Sir Everette's studio, with the result that all the world knows. The original price of the picture was £1000, and the present possessor would, doubtless, require £10,000, or more, even if he would part with it at all. It has been ad-

Barr-The Story of "Cherry Ripe." Eva C. Booth, who has just been recalled to England from the United States to receive from her father final instructions prior to becoming com-mandant of the Army in Canada, knowe the business of the Salvation Army from the first step to the last. Before she was fitteen she was selling War Crys in the streets of London, and since that time she has filled every is grade and rank in the army, from cadet to commissioner. " This woman warrior, whose motto is "Blood and Fire," has had consider able experience with both. Following there early and humble experience in the selling of War Crys, Miss Booth set-tied down in the training home in Loop don and helped her sister to turn out hat instituton. Now, when there is a book to be written, plotted, and completed from cover to cover, Mrs. Barr gives herseld up al-most entirely to the duty in hand. Unlike most authors she never, writes at night, and prefers the very early morning for deciding the fates of lovers, working out graceful counter-parts and rounding out situations. By 5 o'clock she has breakfast, on the veranda, if the weather permits, for like Queen Victoria the author of Jan Veder's wite dearly loves to eat in the open air. The breakfast is a modest meal of dishes easily digested and accompanied by fruit and coffee, but the real morning bracer for the long hours of desk work, is a cofd plunge bath taken directly on rising. When she was considerably less than twenty, the famous Pall Mall Gazette revelations convulsed London, and the Salvation Army took a prominent part in the trouble. Indignant citizens of the lower class who objected to be-ing exposed or saved according to the army's methods, spent a great deal of time bombarding its headquarters and making things unpleasant for officers and privates. Day after day she and her little band of women marched out as a target for sticks and stones, and day after day they marched back very much bruised, but still full of cheerful enthusiasm. It was on one of these occasions that Eva Booth's powers of diplomacy first revealed themselves. The attack was a particularly bit-ter one. The leader was a particularly hero to his neighbor. Ing towards broken brokes and holed sticks as missies. It was during the heat of the conflict, and when the wo-men warriors of the Salvation Army were getting decidedly the worst of it, that Capi. Eva Booth turned con-fidingly to this youth and assured him that he must take care of her. She ex-plained to him that he was stronger than she, and she actually succeeded in making him call of his followers and escort her and here comparitons safely home. Subsequently, when she lay at death's door, this youth pawn-ed his vest and bought a bunch of white grapes which he brought to the door of her sick room in the most Chesterfieldian maner. Little things like this happen frequently in books, but it is a pleasure and a novelty to meet one in real life. The truth of this incident is vouched for. Capt Eva Booth came through the Pail Mall campaign with colors flying, and remained at the slum headquarters until all trouble was over. During these days she learned to play the baaijo and it is sold that on various occasions where other influences failed to save souls, the seductive tones of the banjo did the work. Athought she is not yet thirty years of the banjo did the work. Athought she is 5 not yet thirty years id, she has taken part in four great omflicts, such as allow described. She has conquered every time and she has emerged from the smoke of battle caim and unruffied and with a large following of citizens who had been very enthuisatically oppoad to her in the beginning. The illustration shows her strong face. She is 5 feet 2 inches tall and she weighs about 100 pounds. Her chief beauty lies in her eyes and hair, which are the same soft shade of brown. The hair is very cury and the eyes are large and tired and slightly appealing, just now, perhaps, because they have been turned on so many unfriendly faces. The shape of

-00 last day. "CHERRY RIPE" ON HER MARRIAGE DAY. mirably engraved by Cousins, and also reproduced in color as a supplement to the Graphic Christmas number for 1880. It is no exargeration to say that never has the sweet, simple face of a child met with such world-wide sym-pahty and admiration. The reproduc-tion of the picture was at that time a feat of color printing, and being ex-ecuted entirely by British printers, gave an extraordinary impetus to an important industry. Over 600,000 copies were issued, and if by any means it had been possible to produce them in sufficient quantity at the time, the number would have reached a million. The publisher had to return in cash several thousands of pounds for copies he could not deliver, and sustain actions at law for damages for non-delivery, Miss Edle Ramage married a Spanish gentleman named Fran-elsco De Faulo Ossorio, of Manilla. mirably engraved by Cousins, and also R.
