Escaped His Thanks.

The "Listener" in The Boston Transcript reminds us again that there is no misfortune without its compensations. He tells of a venerable and distinguished old gentleman, who, being very hard of hearing, enjoys the deaf man's immunity, and always carries his "silence compelling veto" with him.

thanks.

Heard melodies are sweet, but those unheard Are sweeter.

says Keats. The smiling "veto" of the deaf old gentleman in this instance put a certain humor into the lines which Keats never meant.

The revival of the rage about the shah of Persia has led to a story on the Hon. Fred Winston, of Chicago, who for a short time represented the United States at the Persian court. When he arrived at Teheran he was met outside of the city by the chamberlain of the court, who in the name of the shah presented him with four elephants. Winston, who had never seen an elephant outside of a menagerie, was paralyzed at his situation, but managed to express his thanks for the shah's great kindness. After he had been presented, and had assumed the duties of his office, his greatest official burden was the care of his elephants. Relief came on the second day, when the intimation was politely conveyed that the shah expected a present from him.

"Certainly," said Winston, as a smile wreathed his face. "I have only been waiting to secure one worthy of so great a ruler." been waiting to secure one worthy of so great a ruler."

That afternoon he proceeded in state to the palace and presented the shah with five elephants. The chamber-lain regarded the elephants with suspicion, but oriental politeness prevents the inspection of a gift horse in the mouth, and, anyhow the extra elephant removed all doubt.

"That extra elephant cost me $100," said Winston, in telling the story afterward. "But I consider myself getting out of a bad scrape cheap at that."—St. Louis Republic. Browning's Striking Personality.

The society of London offers no more striking or interesting figure than that of Robert Browning. It may safely be alleged that no one meeting him for the first time, and unfurnished with a clew, would guess his vocation. He might be a diplomatist, a statesman, a discoverer or a man of science. But whatever were his callings, we must feel that it must be essentially practical. Of the disordered appearance, the unconventional demeanor, the rapt and mystic air, which we assume to be characteristic of the poet, he has absolutely none. And his conversation corresponds to his appearance. It abounds in vigor, in fire, in vivacity. It is always genuinely interesting, and often strikingly eloquent. Yet all the time it is entirely free from mystery, vagueness or technical jargon. It is the crisp, emphatic and powerful discourse of a man of the world, who is comparably better informed than the mass of his congeners.

Mr. Browning is the reediest, the Coffee Test.

The chief analyst of the Dominion department of inland revenue publishes the following directions to his collectors of coffee samples for making their preliminary tests. It is Hagar's method modified: Prepare a saturated solution of common salt. Shake up a small quantity of the coffee to be tested with ten times its bulk of the brine, in a test tube at least three-quarters of an inch in diameter. Repeat the shaking twice, so that the coffee may be thoroughly wetted, and then allow the tube to stand for half an hour. Observe then the color of the brine and the quantity of the sample floating on the surface, as well as the amount deposited in the tube. If the color is a very pale amber, and nearly the whole of the coffee floats, the sample may be assumed to be pure. A decidedly darker or yellow tint indicates admixture of chicory, etc., in which case there is also a larger deposit. This increases, and the color of the brine grows darker with the impurity of the coffee. With 30 per cent. chicory, the brown color is very marked, and with a still larger percentage of adulterant, the brine becomes dark brown.—Boston Herald. ter informed than the mass of his congeners.

Mr. Browning is the readiest, the blithest and the most forcible of talkers. Like the monsignore in "Lothair," he can "sparkle with anecdote, and blaze with repartee," and when he deals in criticism the edge of his sword is mercilessly whetted against pretension and vanity. The inflection of the voice, the fissh of the eye, the pose of the head, the action of the hand, all lend their special emphasis to the condemnation. "I like religion to be treated seriously," he exclaimed with reference to a recent novel of great renown, "and I don't want to know what this curate or that curate thought about it. No, I don't." Surely the secret thoughts of many hearts found utterance in that emphatic cry.

When an unduly fervent admirer had buttonholed him throughout a long evening, plying him with questions about what he meant by this line, or whom he intended by that character, there was exquisite grace as well as just rebuke in the stress on the words, "But I am monopolizing you," with which the master at last extricated himself from the grasp of the disciple.—New Review.

The Ruling Passion.

The close man is not confined to any latitude; the worshiper of mammon pursues the almighty dollar in every clime. Here are two cases—one from New England and the other from Virginia. A neighbor borrowed the hoe from the close fisted one and returned it at evening with his thanks.

"Guess I sh'll hev tew charge ye bout tew cents if the thoe t'day," said the farmer.

A Washington lady was up in Virginia several summers ago. A neighbor dropped into the house where she was boarding and told of the prolific crop of crab apples which he had.

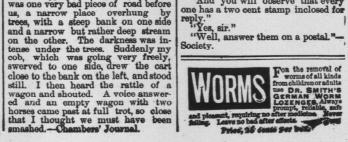

"There are so many," he said, "that I am just going to turn the hogs in to eat them up."

The lady thought it would be a good opportunity to get some cheap for preserving.

"What will you bring me down two bushels for?" she asked. Avarice and a sense of decency wrestled in his mind and avarice won.

"Reckon about $2 a bushel would be about right."—Washington Post.

How the Poetic Youth Was Reminded of the Realities of Life.

They were sitting on the plazza of the hotal at the beach, watching the moon as it slowly rose out of the slumbering sea. Silence was around them, naught being heard save occasionally the faint clatter of dishes in the adjacent restaurant or the musical hum of an aristocratic musquito that was making as vain a search for a blue blooded person as Diogenes did for an honest man. It was the hour for love, sweet, pure, delicious lova. The youth felt it in his soul as he at there by the side of the beautiful maiden, whose silken hair almost touched his shoulder. Suddenly he spoke in low but thrilling and passionate tones:

"To the poetic temperament, to the soul that is capable of feeling the tenderest emotions, that throbe in unison with the harmony of nature, and is susceptible to the influences of the beautiful, there is a peculiar faccination in a scene like this. The balmy air, the rising moon, the twinkling stars, the contiguity of one of the fairest of creation's most perfect work, all unite to awaken in the heart its oftest, tenderest feeling—love. Don't you think so, Mehitable?"

ODDS AND ENDS

Getting into a passion is a good deal like getting into a briar bush. The bush comes out all right but you don't. A FAOT WORTE REMEMBERING.—Mr. Jas. Binnie, of Toronto, states that his little baby when three months old was so bad with summer complaint that under doctor's treatment her life was dispaired of. Four doses of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry cured her. Some people don't hesitate to 'call spade a spade.' Others are not afraid t call a rake a gentleman.

On The Surface.—Skin diseases appear on the surface and are often humiliating to the sufferer from them. From two to three bottles of Burdock Blood Biters will cure salt rheum, erysipelas, shingles, tetter, nettle rash, eczema, beils, pinples, or blotches, at the same time restoring the general health.
