in the British market for our butter product is the question of quality. We have been saying all along that all we have been saying all along that all we have to do make our butter production profitable is to suit the quality of our make to the liking of the British consumer. No doubt that this requirement is the first and most imperative need of our butter industry, but it does not depreciate its importance to say that is is not the whole need. The teachings of the conference suggested another and important problem, the existthe whole need. The teachings of this butter at this price for the English market. This, of course, is salt the existence of which was later confirmed by a careful enquiry into the state of the English market—the great market of the world. It was
