SNAKES AND SNAKE POISON.

Sovereign Remedy, the Best One of Which is to Kill the Snake.

From the Saturday Review.

When the constitutional symptoms of snake-poisoning set in, there is little to be done except to try to steeer the patient through their course by administering light food and stimulants when necessary, and by restoring to artificial respiration in a few suitable cases.

The system of treating a victim to snake poisoning as if he were suffering from narcotic poisoning and keeping him moving about is most injurious, and the opposite course should always be adopted.

Dr. Wall has found no benefit accrue from the injection of ammonia or the permanganate of potash into the blood, nor does he speak encouragingly of the treatment, so often followed in India and elsewhere, of giving large quantities of alcohol to the extent of producing intoxication.

With regard to the prevention of the mortality from snake-bite, the Indian government has issued orders for the killing of poisonous snakes, and the occupation of snake-killers is no doubt much more lucrative than that of rat-exterminator.

The natives, who go about their work bare-footed and generally more than half naked, are often so much under the influence of the ancient superstition of snake-worship as to make war on snakes with a prospect of exterminating them.

English Female Iron-Workers.

From the Philadelphia Record.

Some months ago the Record printed an account of the labors of the female iron-workers in "The Black Country," near Birmingham, England, based on the observations of Mr. Semm's, Esq., Editor.

Contrary to the general opinion, the women very having arisen as to the correctness of the statements of the Record, the matter was referred by a correspondent to the editor of the Wolverhampton (Eng.) Evening Star.

The Star's correspondent, who writes from the Record, adds the following comment: "We may state that representatives of this journal have recently made diligent enquiries as to the correctness of the statements of the Record, and have ascertained that the women are practically the same as those of Mr. Baldwin.

We rather think, indeed, that that gentleman has overrated the great earnings of a family of nail or chain makers. Instead of four and a half dollars clear weekly in case, three and a half would be nearer the mark, and the prospect for the future points to a still further reduction.

Our black country female slaves are engaged in a desperate struggle with the machinery of hand-made chain and nails naturally sinking as machinery improves. Yet, with the prejudice which is born of hereditary connection with the trades, they cling to the forge, and appear to regard hovels as their natural homes, blacksmiths' work as a perfectly regular female employment, and starvation wages as fair remuneration.

Disraeli's Last Days. "We sat after luncheon before a blazing fire in the library. His mind seemed to be full of the past and of his youth. He spoke of his early friendship with the three Sherrin sisters, all beautiful women; the present day, however, was spent in the company of Lady Duffin and of Mrs. Norton.

He described how delightful were the dinners in old days at Mrs. Norton's, more than 40 years ago, and of the wit and humor that then flowed, more copiously by far than it does now, from the lips of the three Sherrin sisters, more beautiful than her beautiful sisters, 'Dreams! dreams! dreams!' he murmured, gazing at the fire and smiling at a cherished memory.

"I have not smoked, dearest, since you were last here." The next time I was at Englewood was to follow a dinner of Lady Duffin's. "But I can still fancy I see him among his beloved books, gazing at the fire, and murmuring in an absent way, 'Dreams! Dreams! Dreams!' and after all what is this life but one? And how often so out of it that one would fain awake from out of it to go to his life." "Life! Lord Bacon's words said to me that last time I was with him at Englewood, 'life is an enigma, or a trouble, and he enlarged on the subject by saying that life is full of troubles and anxieties, for fear of losing the position or wealth they have obtained; and for those born with great wealth, the life is nothing to strive for, and life then becomes a mere bore, an enigma, and burden. 'My idea,' he added, 'of a happy future life is one of those long quiet days when one dies at 9 o'clock.'—Lord Rosalind's story.

Don't buy old-fashioned, noisy Singer Patent machines because they are Singers, and they are noisy and noisy and noisy. Wagon Co. no noisy and rattling cog-wheels, no old-fashioned shuttle and needle bar. The Wagon is noiseless and quiet. It never has a noisy machine without having a Wagon on trial for a few days, and compare value. The Wagon is the best machine for ten years' use. 246 King street west.

A Russian emigrant recently came to this country with a name so long that it took him a week to get out of the office. He was the gang plank, and even then the last ten syllables had to be chopped off because a mile in the forward end of the hold was wanting on them.
