General Sir Arthur W. Currie.

Dear Sir Arthur Currie:-

I have the pleasure of reading a copy of Dr. Clark's letter of Toronto to you of June 15th. It is no news to you to be told of the very serious undermining of our principles of government, as well as in Canada, by the Reds.

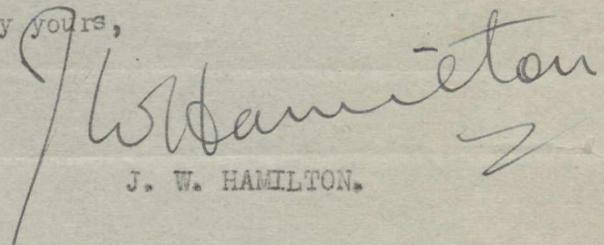

I have often been asked by merchants visiting our wholesale house why the big men of the country do not do something to offset the Red campaign, and I have no reply to make.

I enclose you an issue of a plan to use traveling salesmen somewhat. Canada must have 50,000 traveling men. They go everywhere, all the time. They represent the producing classes, and by guiding their minds skilfully along certain educational lines, a tremendous force is right at our hand, and the cost will be gladly borne by the employer.

I hope you will see enough in this idea, and in the other, which I have called the American Leaflet University League, to select a little committee from McGill and others, perhaps, and consider these plans. We are in duty bound to do what we can to distribute sound political economy and sterling common sense. While there are millions of people who will not read such leaflets, there are millions who will, and these are the ones we wish to win.

May I hear from you?

Very sincerely yours,

J. W. HAMILTON.
