An examination showed that the back of his head had been badly cut and bruised, and that his nose had been broken. During the night he had several hemorrhages, and at an early hour this morning he was still unconscious. Blissender is only 35 years of age, but he has only a slim chance of recovery.

The man who persuaded the late Goldwin Smith to leave Oxford University for America was in Toronto yesterday. His name is Andrew White and he is a picturesque figure. For ten years he was United States ambassador to Germany and for six more years he was in St. Petersburg in the same capacity. Seen last night by The World at the King Edward Hotel he stated that it was his third visit to Toronto. His first was fifty years ago and his second twenty-five years later.

Ex-Ambassador White came to Toronto with a two-fold purpose: first, to see the home and the last resting-place of his dead friend and colleague, and, secondly, to look at the magnificent organ in the Toronto University. He has been for some years a lecturer at Cornell University, to which Goldwin Smith gave no less than $700,000, Cornell, which already has a fine organ, is to have another, and Prof. White, accompanied by Architect William H. Miller, also of the Cornell staff, were anxious to see the organ at Toronto's university, with a possible view of installing one similar at Cornell. The visitors were delighted with the university here, which, in point of students on the roll compares favorably with their own variety. They were particularly impressed with the imposing building up in Queen's Park.
