

JURY DECIDES PRISONER IS FIT FOR TRIAL

Almost immediately afterwards Towers announced that he had shot Captain Clews, the Crown prosecutor, and that this was the first that any of the crew knew that the captain had been killed.

The prisoner's excuse for the shooting, as related by witnesses at the preliminary hearing, was that the other officers of the ship "had been up against him for 12 months" and that he had intended to shoot Captain Clews, Gilmour, Allan, McLellan and the purser, but his revolver failed him.

The Crown counsel said that reports damaging to Captain Clews' reputation had been made in the ship's company, and this had resulted in a heated scene between the captain and Towers and another of the ship's officers, Allan Allan, denial of spreading stories against the captain were accepted by Captain Clews, who, however, refused to accept a similar denial from Towers, to whom he said: "Towers, it is quite clear this is not all. I know more than you think."

Apparently the captain suspected that Towers was making derogatory statements about him behind his back, the Crown counsel said. Towers had appeared to think that Captain Clews had kept him back from getting command of the Melita.

PRISONER WAS COOL. One thing was clear, Rogers added, and this was that Towers was cool and collected at the time of the shooting. He remarked to the master-at-law, after his arrest on the vessel, that he was sorry he had not shot McLellan, to whom he pointed when he said it, and then exclaimed to Gilmour: "Die, Gilmour, die."
