> Again, all unsuspected, the King is often on the lookout for patterns of cloth which are particularly to his fancy and he finds them in odd places.
> On the occasion of the Fraemar gath.

On the occasion of the Braemar gathering two years ago he saw some brown tweed which pleased him very fact, night or day, it is hard to get

In the first place, he desired to have the cloth by him for another suit if he should ever want one, and in the second he was wise enough to foresee that unless he took this precaution there would be at once a very vulgar run on the remainder of the cloth by the Toms, Dicks and Harrys of the general public, which would conduce neither to his dignity nor theirs.

Some remarkable revelations have just been made, writes a correspondent, of the manner in which professional beggars are trained.

They came to light through the arrest of Charles Carrol, who keeps a "hospital" in one of the slums of New York where beggars are trained for service in all parts of the United States, and even Great Britain.

As showing again how unconventional is the King, it may be said that had does not often give a second thought as to what others will think if he is quite satisfied that an article of apparel is in perfectly good taste, and does not violate any of the canons of English dress.

Not long since he might have been seen walking about the grounds of Windsor Castle wearing a purple lounge suit—probably the only one of its kind in England.

"Our principal business," Carroil remarked to an interviewer, "is to fix up 'injured' hands and feet, and teach people how to feign fits.

"It is the expression, however, that makes the beggar's fortune. There is as much art in a good beggar as there is in an actor.

"A humped hip is made with a cigar-box and cotton wool padding, while an injured leg is managed by wrapping up the foot, shoe and all, in bandages. Cancer and wounds, which "Our principal business," Carroll re-
