THE BEST SHOTS IN THE WORLD ARE THE KENTUCKY MOUNTAINEERS

The best shots in the world are the Kentucky mountaineers. The west has nothing to compare with them. When it comes to "pulling a gun" quickly and shooting accurately the most expert of frontiers had men would appear slow and clumsy by the side of many of these mountain outlaws. They learn to shoot almost as soon as they graduate from the cradle. Many of their sports relate to shooting. The proprietor of the crossroads store has a shooting gallery in his establishment, where in other localities you might find a slot machine. In one store I saw a wheel about half the size of a spinning wheel with pieces of cardboard containing numbers on the different spokes. The charge was "pilence" (10 cents) a shot, and the participant picked his number. The prizes ranged all the way from a box of cartridges to a bag of corn meal or a side of "sow bacon," according to the size of the piece of cardboard selected. The wheel was given a swift whirl by the store keeper, but judging from the shooting I saw I could not find out wherein he derived any profit from the contrivance, says C. T. Revere, in Everybody's Magazine.

REGULAR WALKING ARSENALS. During four times the combatants are regular walking arsenals. I saw old Shackleford when trouble was brewing between himself and old Lige Howard which threatened to involve the clan, but finally was settled peacefully. He carried a Winchester, 45.30, and his supply of six-shooters would have stocked a pawnshop window. He had one in each boot, two in leather holsters at his belt, one in a holster under the left armpit and another in a holster inside his shirt just where it buttoned in front over his chest—six revolvers in all. This accoutrements were in a sly, suspicious manner, in which he might be surprised. I was told that the holster in the shirt front was the favorite one, as the weapon could be flashed with incredible rapidity.

I saw Abe McCoy, of Hatfield-McCoy fame, some shooting that would make anything in Buffalo Bill's Wild West show look cheap. A fellow-survivor and myself had left camp the day before, and the following night we rode up to one of the most prosperous mountain farmhouses and asked for supper and lodging. Soon after our arrival another man rode up. It is probable he would not have stopped had he seen our horses, for that would have warned him of the presence of strangers. Once in the house he did not care to draw back. He interested us greatly, although we did not learn until the next morning that he was Abe McCoy, one of the leading members of the family that had impressed itself so indelibly on the bloody history of three states. He ate supper with us in silence, eyeing us myself in a sly, suspicious manner. He sat opposite to us at the table, and never was his back turned to us. There was the danger that we might be detected by marshals or revenue agents, and he took no chances.

DISTRUST NEVER FADED. It seemed to me that his distrust might fade after a while, but it did not. He brought his horse around to the front of the cabin, saddled and bridled, with the bit slipped out of the animal's mouth. At the slightest alarm he could have been in full flight in a few seconds. He sat around with the rest of us, but talked little, and never once did his eyes leave us two—the strangers in the group. That night my comrade and I went to bed in the room with the rest of the family, but McCoy sat in a chair tilted against the side of the chimney, with his hat pulled down over his eyes. The two six-shooters at his belt were in plain view, and I saw the butts of two others peeping from his boot tops. As I found out afterward he had two more, one in the armpit holster and another in the shirt front holster.

ALMOST BECAME TALKATIVE. He got up before we did, and before we ate breakfast were told who he was. We instantly tried in every way to get acquainted with him, and succeeded in convincing him of our harmlessness to the extent of getting him to ride with us when we left. But his watchfulness never deserted him, and he politely but firmly insisted that we ride ahead. By degrees we drew him out, and in his quiet way he became almost talkative. He told us he had been mixed up in the feud with the Hatfields.

"It's been so long since it began though, I don't know what it started 'bout," he admitted in response to a question. "I suppose you are quite a shot."

He asked me, as we came to the creek where we were to part company. "Yes, I kin shoot some," said McCoy, modestly. Then we implored him to give an exhibition of his skill. He seemed a little reluctant and once more a shadow of distrust flitted across his lean face. But we urged him frantically, and finally he yielded. The Harvard man raked out half a dollar. McCoy then placed us about thirty feet apart, and it looked as if he was making arrangements to take care of us one at a time in case he saw any signs of treachery on our part. "Pitch up the coin," ordered McCoy. My companion obeyed. Two shots cracked out. There stood McCoy, smiling grimly, unharmed as far as we could observe. Neither of us had seen him draw a gun or put it back, so marvelously quick had he been. Nor could we find the coin. But McCoy went right to the spot and picked it up. It was a hole almost through the centre and another near the edge where the milling had been shot away. The first shot must have knocked the coin a considerable distance, and that he should have hit a second time seems unbelievable. It is still a mystery which revolver he used, although he probably employed the one in his shirt front holster. We tried to get him to tell us, but he evaded the question.

"That's tricks in all trades, boys," he laughed. "It's mine, and it's done looks me a long while to learn it." We rode away and he was still by the ford watching us when we turned and waved good-by.

WHAT HEY LOST. A travelling man was leaning against the counter in the hotel gazing disconsolately at the floor. "Lose something?" queried the hotel clerk. A nod of the head answered. "Was it very valuable?" "Twice with the nod." "Here you had it when you came in?" A third nod. His face was growing wistful. "You should have put it in the safe." "Could not have done that very well."

His voice quivered. The clerk stretched his neck and gasped, "Why, what was it?" "It was," the travelling man began, but he choked. "Prize-my job!" "Oh pardon me a minute, the phone is ringing." And the clerk tipped softly away. A dismal stillness reigned.

HOW BISMARCK KEPT UP STEAM. In the evening I went to Bismarck's house. I was placed upon a sofa in front of a table covered with tea-cups and bottles of beer and also with herrings and oysters. His new highest (Bismarck) speedily arrived and sat down by me. He began by consuming innumerable oysters, herrings and ham and drank beer with soda water.

EARLY DENTISTRY. The art of dentistry was practiced among the Egyptians and Ethiopians, and there are evidences in mummies and skulls that in very ancient times teeth were filled and efforts were made to supply the loss of natural by artificial teeth. The first writer on the treatment of diseased teeth was Galen. The science was introduced into America by John Greenwood, who established himself in New York in 1788. In 1790 and again in 1796 he carved in ivory an entire set of teeth for General Washington.

INCREASE OF ENGLISH SPEAKERS. Within one hundred years the number of persons speaking the English language has grown from 20,000,000 to 125,000,000. During this time no other language has made the slightest advance. At the beginning of the last century the leading languages of Continental Europe were French, German and Spanish; the Spanish language at present is spoken by about 18,000,000 in Spain and 25,000,000 in America. German has held its own and is spoken by about 80,000,000 people. More than 20,000,000 persons speak the language outside of Germany. Twice as many persons speak Portuguese outside of Portugal as in the country itself. French in the language of 14,000,000 persons outside of France. It is estimated that at the dawn of the twenty-fifth century the English of 14,000,000 persons in the United States, while a similar number will be added in India, where the learning of the language has become compulsory.
