

CHRISTIAN PROGRESS 133

God has never left himself without a witness in the dark ages. In the middle age there was a moral standard and the Christian age had many societies of Christian endeavour that will do lasting good and add to the best interests of the Church. The strongest and most fixed passion of the human heart is liberty and the Christian lives a life of liberty. There is an attractiveness about the Christian religion that leads us on to the Giver of all good.

It has inspired the Pilgrim Fathers and many others with zeal and courage to live heroic deeds and has given us an idea of a higher civilization and the human voice is the receptacle of Divine inspiration. Christian work is bright and glorious, its design, aim and purpose is to save the world.

"They call us to deliver
Their land from errors chain."
