

Several of them were playing with skipping-ropes, laughing and shouting with great enjoyment. Two girls would wind the rope, slowly and steadily, until another girl would run in and begin to skip, while the rope turned faster and faster, and at last the skipper was out of breath. And yet these girls were blind! How did they manage to run toward the rope just at the right time, and not get entangled, or jump at the wrong moment? That is a puzzle for little folks who can see when they skip!"

"The Farringtons", by Ellen Thorneycroft Fowler, is amusing though not frivolous; on the contrary it touches, here and there a deep human note. Some people say its dialogue is "too smart", but they read it all the same. It takes a "smarter" reader to enjoy "The Farringtons" than it does to appreciate "To Have and To Hold"; this is evidenced by the sales of the respective books. The latter is still going by the 1,000 and has not yet reached its zenith. It is the "record" story of this year just as "David Harrow" was of last - so far as numbers are concerned. But having read "To Have" and its companion volume "Prisoners of Hope", you might test yourself on "The Farringtons" at all Bookellers' or post paid for George Murray Company Limited 90 Wellington St. W. Toronto.
